The Debates.

The debaters represented widely different sections of the country. Of the Vassar speakers, Miss Elizabeth Johnson, ’02, resides in Ida, N. Y., and was prepared for college in the Utica Academy. Miss Celia Spicer, a junior at Vassar, is from Providence, R. I., and took her preparatory work at the classical, high school of Providence. Miss Mildred Thompson, ’03, lives in Atlanta, Ga., and received her education in southern schools.

The Wellesley speakers represented the senior, junior and sophomore classes. Miss Bertha Woods, ’02, is from Erie, Pa., where she was educated. Miss Frances Warren, ’03, lives in Cheyenne, Wyo. She is a daughter of United States Senator Francis Warren, and received her preparatory education in the Cheyenne high school, the Washington, D. C. high school and Walnut Hill school at Nauck. She has also spent a year in study in Boston. Miss Louise Hunter, ’04, lives in Chicago, and was prepared for college at the Hyde Park high school.

Each team did honor to the college it represented: Vassar by the ease and self-possession of its debaters and the lucidity and smoothness of their English, each speech being a finished production; Wellesley by the clear and straightforward statement of facts and the consistency with which each of the three debaters kept to the question at issue and the main argument. In a general summing up, Vassar's treatment of the case may be said to have been theoretical, but with form excellently finished; Wellesley's treatment, practical, but presentation less polished.

The Debate.

Promptly at 7 o'clock the ushers, under the charge of Miss May Matthews, senior president, conducted the senior class to its section.

Shortly after 7.30 the chairman of the evening, William H. Lincoln, president of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, and the six debaters took their places on the platform. After a few remarks appropriate to the occasion, Mr. Lincoln announced the question of debate: "Resolved, that it would be advantageous to the United States to subsidize her Merchant Marine." Mr. Lincoln then announced the limitation of the question, Wellesley supported the affirmative side, and Vassar the negative.

Miss Louise Hunter, Wellesley, ’04, opened the debate. Miss Hunter emphasized the prestige at home and abroad which a strong merchant marine gives a country. She showed the great opportunities opening to the United States, if the United States would but seize them, and take advantage of the open markets. In winding up, Miss Hunter spoke of the great need for markets, the great opportunity for trade and the great need for ships. The next point established was the fact that some legislative stimulus is needed to obtain an adequate marine under the national flag.

Miss Frances Warren showed that subsidy would furnish the stimulus needed to create a marine to carry our merchant interests. Miss Warren then centered part of her time in answering the following questions:

"Will subsidy offset present disadvantages and place Americans upon an equal footing with their foreign competitors?"

"When Americans are put upon an equal footing with their foreign competitors can they and will they compete with them?"

Miss Warren then brought forward evidence to prove the greater cost of constructing ships in the United States and of operating them. Miss Warren, in her evidence, brought out that "facts are stubborn things, supported by personal interviews" with the heads of several large steamship companies to the loud applause of the audience. Throughout her whole speech Miss Warren kept the audience in a local mood, by her perfectly easy bearing and quick touches of humor.

Miss Bertha Woods, ’02, in a clear and convincing manner, outlined the advantages which would result to American interests if a subsidy should be adopted: as a foundation for our navy, as a training school for our navy, and as a means of carrying on our commerce in cases of foreign intrigue and war. Miss Woods also showed that the former and manufacturer would derive great benefits, that foreign interests would be developed through the opening up of the mines, and finally that the less of prestige to America in having its produce carried by foreign vessels.

Miss Thompson, Miss Spicer and Miss Johnson on the negative, contended that a ship subsidy would be a needless extravagance on the part of the government, as we now get good service with our merchant marine in good condition without a subsidy.

The negative continued also that the United States is able to build and operate ships as cheaply as other countries. It contended further that a subsidy would be positively injurious. It would lead to class legislation. This would lead eventually to personal legislation, for the ship builder with political influence would obtain the subsidy.

The main speeches were twelve minutes in length. Following these, four minutes were allowed each speaker for rebuttal. In spite of several points gained in these speeches, Wellesley showed its weakest point in the rebuttal.

With the last speaker finished, the judges retired, and the time of waiting for decision was occupied with songs from the Wellesley Glee Club, two of the selections sung by Miss Wheeler and Miss McDermid, were loudly applauded.

Some think the Vassar girls are fine debaters, and so do I, and so do I. Some think they are the best of demonstrators; I'll not deny—it is not to try.

President Hazard’s House.

Within a few weeks now, Miss Hazard’s new house will be ready for occupancy, and this is naturally an event in which the Wellesley girls have a warm interest.

The situation of this new “President’s House” is exceptionally good—on the wooded knoll near Stone Hall, which commands a view along the main highway through the beautiful waters of Lake Waban and the wooded highlands beyond, while near at hand are broad meadows and noble trees. The house has its entrance frontage on the same driveway which leads toward Stone Hall.

In its general effect, the new house is dignified, harmonious—in a word, suitable to place and purpose. It is a modern, two and a half stories in height, with wings, giving a frontage of about ninety feet, the second story being somewhat smaller. The main entrance is through an English basement on the Stone Hall side of the house, under a broad porte cochere. The square entrance hall has on the left a small reception room, on the right the stairway leading to the living part of the house. The hallway walls throughout are to be finished in a ground color of red, with a narrow border of conventionalized scallop shells below and doves above, pressed into the plaster.

Vertically opposite the stairway landing is the president’s study on the south-west corner of the house. These walls will be done in a dull Persian blue, the hangings for it are red, and the Persian floor-rug is of beautifully blended reds and blues; opposite the fireplace a Dutch door opens out upon a veranda overlooking the lake.

Across the hall from the study, at the right of the stairway, is the reception room, which has an effective dull green Oriental paper and handsome Chinese hangings. At the end of the hall is the drawing-room—of admirable proportions, twenty feet by thirty—which, with the reception room and study, makes a sort of clover leaf of rooms, all the top leaf larger than the others. This room, furnished in cream color and buff, will virtually duplicate the drawing room at Miss Hazard’s home, Oakwoods, in Peace Dale, R. I.

The dining-room, next to the study, on the left, is eighteen by fourteen feet in size, will have a high wainscoting and be painted in dark, rich crimson. The furnishing at a mahogany, with a beautiful old Chipendale sideboard, also from the Oakwoods house, a mahogany dining table, with a handsomely carved border in place of the usual beveled edges, and low-framed mahogany chairs in the design known as “Eldie-backed.”

Beyond the dining-room, on the left, are the butler’s pantry, the kitchen, and a small kitchen dining room. There is also a guest-room, bath, on the ground floor, at the left of the entrance stairway landing. And in the basement are the laundry and other necessary household equipment.

Upstairs, in the second story, there are four bedrooms, linen closets and bath-rooms. The southeast room, over the dining-room, is to be furnished in a charming scheme of old rose and green, the north room in red, the northwest room in soft green, with a suggestion of pink, and the southwest room with blue for its dominant color. In the third story are rooms for fifteen house servants.

Both inside and out, the new house will be attractive, dignified, home-like and elegant—a happy combination which promises well for its future.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

In speaking of athletics at Radcliffe, the Transcript correspondent writes, “The fine weather has brought out the bicycles, the shirt waists and the tennis racquets of the college girls. The swimming pool, too, is now open for its spring season, and the students are generally availing themselves of the privileges it offers. Hockey is, however, the sport which arouses most enthusiasm just at present, and every Tuesday and Thursday a devoted group of students spend themselves on the practice necessary to good work in this newest athletic interest of the American college girl.”

CHRISTENING OF 1905'S BOAT.

Last Monday afternoon the boat of 1905 brought forth its new boat, which has been in the boat-house for the last two weeks. A good part of the college was present to witness the christening, besides many outside guests. The affair took place at quarter of three in College Hall Core. The crew of the three upper classes and one-freshman crew in the old practice boat were out on the lake to receive the new boat when it was brought up. Miss Hazard made a short speech to the guests. After Miss Hazard's speech the president of 1905, Miss Gurlitz, was rowed out in a small boat to where the other crews were waiting. Then the new boat, captained by Miss Minnie Dowd, was rowed up alongside the small boat containing the class president who then christened the boat by throwing a bunch of flowers on her prow and letting loose a white dove saying, "Christene thee Mann ka wai, Bird of the Sea." 1905 then gave its cheer, and the three upper classes in turn cheered for 1905.

The boat was built by Mr. Terry, the Harvard Boat Builder, and by a system of iron and wooden braces, is made much stronger and more durable than any class boat on record. It is also narrower than the other boats, and has longer sweeps. We congratulate 1905 on its good judgment in purchasing a boat of this type.
