MR. YEATS' PLAYS.

The occasion of the presentation of “Cathleen ni Houlihan,” “The Land of Heart’s Desire” and “The Hour Glass,” at Wellesley on November 21 makes mention of former interest here in Mr. Yeats' work opportune. Again we are coming, all of us, to look upon the "new static theater" from the point of view of interest in the play of the future, and it will be well to recall and consider our own experience with "static" plays, in contrast with regular Barnswallow Dramatics. Two such plays have been given at Wellesley—both by Mr. Yeats—"The Land of Heart’s Desire" and "Cathleen ni Houlihan." In both cases the plays proved "actable" and so far as has been overheard, interesting to the spectators.

It may be that further experiments here with the play of mood rather than of plot will assist us to estimate better the respective values of each.

"Cathleen ni Houlihan" was presented before Mr. Yeats by the Phi Sigma Society at the time of his visit to Wellesley in the fall of 1903. Perhaps in no other of the Yeats plays is a better blending of myth, legend and romance; and an attempt was made to reproduce the atmosphere of these in the representation. The national basis for the play is the landing of the French at Killala in 1798. The object of the play is to bring the national idea into the picture of peasant life. "The poor old woman," Cathleen ni Houlihan, is the poetic embodiment of the spirit of Ireland, who entering the peasant cottage in the midst of joyous preparations for the wedding of Michael, eldest son of the peasants, so works upon the spirit of the lad that he forsakes his personal love to follow the leading of his country’s spirit.

Since "Cathleen ni Houlihan" had never been given before in America, it was peculiarly interesting to hear Mr. Yeats' criticism of it as given by amateurs. He expressed warmly his pleasure in the play as a whole, but noted that the songs of Cathleen, who was Miss More, should undoubtedly have been given with more rhythm, or, as he expressed it, "to little tunes," because Cathleen is a poetic spirit and needs the music of rhythm to be more suitably creative. He especially commended Miss Lape’s rendering of Michael, saying that it gave complete satisfaction that she had not yet secured in her Irish company. The peasant parts were taken by Miss Luff, Miss Anderson and Miss Harper, Miss Harper’s betrothed, was Miss Helen Rollins.

On the night of May 24, 1903, for a final Barnswallow entertainment, 1904, girls gave Mr. Yeats’ play, "The Land of Heart’s Desire." It was a good deal of an experiment for college girls, both as actors and as audience, the clairvoyance of such strangers and sadness as come into this tragic little story, but the result was a true success. The girls gave it simply, delicately, as a thing they both loved and understood. Quaint old Irish folk songs preceded the first act, and through all the act, sounded the hauntingly sweet singing of the Fairy child, who came to make Braine Brutan, the strange girl-wife, to her fancy folk. This old time superstition of the fairies stealing new married brides on the May eve makes the substance of the plot.

"The Hour Glass" is a morality telling of a Wise Man, who knew all things but faith. He had brought all the country people, all his students, his wife and little children, to hold the same as himself, "there is no heaven, there is no hell, there is no purgatory. For this, because heaven he cannot forgive, and in finding of an hour, someone who still believes. In vain he calls upon those whom he had won from their faith; they laugh or tell him his own arguments. In utter despair, at last he declares with the Fool, whom before he had scorned, as not even worth trying to convince. Humbly he flies to Hell where he learns the lesson of faith before the angel comes to take his soul to Heaven.

FIELD DAY.

Monday, November 21, was Wellesley’s fourth annual Field Day. The various events were as usual watched with great interest by merry crowds whose enthusiasm could not be chilled by temperature, and who joyously cheered the players.

Yet this Field Day was characterized by happenings that will be remembered years, inasmuch as the freshmen could not enter into the competition. As has been already explained, the time was entirely marked by having 19 facts in all. The training of 1905 to compete for the Field Day Cup. It is hoped that they will work in determined fashion toward the Field Day next year and do all the better for their long training.

It is much to be regretted that 1907 defeated in both basket-ball and running, and so could not enter in those sports. Last year 1907 won the cup and we had expected great things from the class this year, an expectation which is now deferred to the time when 1907 will surely retrieve its reputation.

The first event was basket-ball which was played at 9.30 between 1905 and 1906. In the two preliminary games 1905 had won easily, and in this final game the score was 6-3 in favor.

Next came the running, consisting of two events, the dash and the relay. 1906 won the former and 1905 the latter.

Shot-put followed next on the program. Here 1905, 1906 and 1907 were all represented, Miss Walworth, 1907, won the championship, and Miss Wheeler, 1906, second place.

The preceding events occurred on the Music-hall playground, but to see the hockey game between 1906 and 1907 everybody adjourned to the hockey field beyond the West Woods. The game was exciting, as 1907 had defeated 1905 previously, and the 1906 and 1907 teams are both very good. In this game, however, the final score was 5-3. This has now 20 points, counting 5 for basket-ball, 5 for golf, in which Miss Abbott has the championship, 5 for the relay race and 3 for the two-yard dash, won by Miss Robertson.

The 1906 points are 5 for basket-ball, 3 for golf, won by Miss Edwards, for for relay, 5 for dash, won by Miss Hall, and for shot-put 10 points, counting 5 for dash, won by Miss Robertson.

At the close of Field Day, the events still to be played off were the tennis game between Miss MacKellar, 1905, and Miss Thomas, 1906, for the College Championship, and the game between 1905 and 1906 for second place in hockey. The Field Day Championship depends on the result of these two events.

BARNSWALLOWS.

A Harvest Party, heralded by a most dainty and artistic poster, took place at the Barn on Saturday evening, November 19. The Barnswallows were represented this time by a merry throng of farmer lads and country lasses who danced gaily to the strains of a hurdy-gurdy, or played with the many "city visitors" who put aside their dignity to join whole-heartedly in the merry-making. Corn stalks, hay, and pumpkins made effective decorations; apples, and cider were plentiful, and the air of informality and good-will which pervaded the Barn gave the "Swallows," old and new, a most delightful opportunity of becoming better acquainted.

ARTIST RECITALS.

Single tickets for the recital by de Pachmann on Monday evening, November 28, may be obtained at Room C, Billings Hall, Wednesday, November 23, 9.30-10.30 A.M. or Saturday, 26, 9.30-10.30. COLLEGE NOTES.

Miss Herford, in her original monologues, Monday evening, November 14, at College Hall chapel, was delightful, of course. Those who had heard Miss Herford before knew what pleasure to expect, and those who were initiated to these delightful original presentations found Miss Herford at her best, which is saying a great deal.

Monday, November 14, at Freeman, Miss Dennison gave a reception and dinner for the former residents of Freeman. Among those who had lived in Freeman, were present, Miss Tufts, '84; Miss Alice Allen, '85; Miss Olive Davis, '86; Mrs. Charles Wardwell, '92; Miss Vivian, '94; Miss Sophie Hoyt, '96; Miss Mary Frazer Smith, '96; Miss Mary Bliss, '99; Miss Southard, '96; Miss Anna Edwards, '97; Miss Marian Low, '97; Miss Putney, '97; Miss Lilla Weed, '97, and Miss Mitzlaff.

A member of the Faculty recently said to a student, "How can I get acquainted with certain girls in whom I am interested? I have asked them to call on me more than once, but they have not come. I should really like to know them."

"If you can't do anything more about the matter," said the student, "I would like to hear what you have to say about this.It seems to me that this remark, in surprise, "How can we be sure that she are not asked merely out of politeness?' and then cited an instance where she had made a call after a general invitation, and had gone away feeling as if she had intruded. She had been careful, too, she said, to choose a time which she had thought would be convenient.

Another member of the Faculty deplored the way in which they frequently occur upon social occasions. Students forming little groups and Faculty members forming little groups, and neither knowing just how to approach the other. It is our old shibboleth of etiquette—"which, but do not dare to ignore. A student dare not make advances, because she is mindful of the established position of the instructor and of the manifold other demands upon that instructor's time. The members of the Faculty are afraid to make advances, lest she should seem to presume upon that position and force an acquaintance which might not be desired. There is a general impression on both sides, more or less widespread, that the other does not wish to go beyond her own circle. One of the questions which the inquisitive Teacher's Agency asks is: "with what member of the Faculty are you best acquainted socially?" and more than one girl has filled out the rest of the application because she had been appalled to find that she has not known any in a social way.

We believe there are very few girls who do not wish the privileges that become acquainted with someone who can do the things well which the student has come to college to learn, if she can, how to do. Etiquette then stands in the way. In the belief that many members of the Faculty do desire to know their girls, I venture to send in a list of some things which, from a student's point of view, act as a barrier.

First and most important, many of the Faculty have no special at all in this regard, when students who do not know them well enough to call at any seasonable time can feel at liberty to call. Those who do call are apt to find the instructor immersed in work—or out.

Second, girls in whom the instructor has taken a class-room interest would often like to call, but are never asked, and consequently remain in a state of hesitation.

Third, although no one has time to know every acquaintance in the corridors, there are girls who feel that out of class their instructors always forget to recognize them. Even after they have been asked to call, they may not dare to under these circumstances.

Often an instructor is kind enough to give an invitation to a large class, and is hurt to find that almost nobody responds. As an apology for this may suggest that many of the class who are not shining lights feel a certain difficulty in appropriating the invitation to themselves. This is no fault of the instructor; it is true, but we offer it to explain our point of view.

A week or so ago there appeared in the Free Press column two articles advocating having Field Day in the Spring. We who are most interested in athletics do not want Field Day in the spring. It is just this brisk, cold, autumn weather that gives the girls the snap and vigor with which they should enter a field for strenuous exercise. Most sports become very fatiguing if played in warm weather. There is enough exercise in a sport to keep a healthy girl warm while playing enthusiastically without the added heat of spring days. Then it is not better that the Seniors should compete in their last Field Day, rather than be kept out of it by the numerous duties, social and scholastic, that pile themselves up, even in the early spring? If one class is to be sacrificed to Field Day, is it not better that this class be the Freshmen, who can not miss what they have not had, nor have time to prepare for? Then too, although we are not sure of pleasant autumn days, yet everyone will agree with me that we are less sure of spring days,—and how common it is to have several days of steady rain, which, with the warmer weather, makes the ground unfit for play for several days after. And besides this, there is the strain of the last term's work, the effect of much to be overcome, and above all, the overpowering, debilitating ennui of "spring fever," that universal and un-shake-offable aliment which seizes us with the first breath of spring and makes impossible that lively and keen sporting spirit which is necessary to successful athletics.

A Captain.

It often occurs here at College that two girls come from the same place, perhaps live on the same street or just around the corner. When vacation comes one of these girls may go home while the other one goes visiting or down to the shore. After the vacation is over the girl who does not go home is always anxious to have her more fortunate friend tell her something of the family at home, no special item of news, but just that they are well, what they were doing when her friend saw them or some little thing that they said. And are not the mother and father just as anxious to hear a direct word from their daughter who could not come home to see them for the vacation? It is a little thing but it is always appreciated when the girl who is home will stop in to see her friend's mother for a moment or if she is too busy just telephone. Perhaps her trunk will be full when she comes back, but what pleasure it gives if she offers to take some little package back to her friend at college. We are all so busy with our own affairs that we lose many opportunities to do various little kindnesses for those around us. Then let us remember when vacations come, if we are fortunate enough to go home, that the girl who is near us may not be so fortunate and may wish very much to send a message or a package to her family or receive one from them.

I want to call the attention of the girls who are to remain at College during the Thanksgiving recess, to the many fine plays now being offered at the Boston theaters. Classes on matinee days prevent many of us from going to the theater while college is in session, but now we have two free afternoons before us, and better still an unusually large choice among the best and most representative of the American and English players and play-writers.

LIBRARY NOTES.

The Library was honored a few weeks ago by a visit from Mr. Franklin B. Sanborn of Concord, who came to the College in quest of an early American romance relating to the Deless-deriere family. Mr. Sanborn has sent the Library a pleasant souvenir of his visit, in a copy of his biographical study of President Langdon, the patriot president of Harvard whom Tory students forced to resign. The sketch contains some charming illustrations of old Salem and Portsmouth residences.

Among other attractions now displayed on the shelves reserved for recent additions to the Library, one notes with interest "Causes and Consequences," by John J. Chapman. The work might well have been entitled "Post-Election Meditations of a Reformer," but it is the work of a reformer who, though defeated, is still in the fight. The book abounds in epigrams and clever caracterizations.

A timely book for students in English 15, but not less interesting to the general reader, is Francis Wellman's "Art of Cross-Examination." The "art" is so well illustrated by entertaining examples from famous trials as almost to make one agree with Mr. Wellman that cross-examination is one of the fine arts. Some of Mr. Wellman's maxims are susceptible of wider application than to court-room practices; as, for example, "Hold your own temper while you lead the witness to lose his."

CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

For those who were not present at the business meeting of the Christian Association, held November 17, in College Hall chapel, the following report is given: The resignation of Miss Clara Griffin, '97, as Treasurer of the Association was read, and Miss Georgia Harrison, '06, was elected to fill the vacancy. Miss Slack, the General Secretary, gave a short review of the work accomplished thus far in the year, comparing it with last year's work. The Association has enlarged its enrollment from 750 to 883, 243 of whom are new members. The membership of the Bible Study classes has increased from 131 to 270, and that of the Mission Study classes from 35 to 110.

Miss Kendrick then spoke of our missionary in India, Dr. Humé. On account of our not sending a Christmas box to her this year, she urged each individual girl to send to Dr. Humé a letter or Christmas card to show her appreciation of her work. Her address is to be placed on the Christian Association bulletin board.

Before the meeting adjourned, Miss Hubbs gave a brief account of the organizing of the classes for debate, in which some of the students are conducting. Thirteen classes have been arranged and the membership of each class is good. If any girl wishes to aid in this work, she is now given the opportunity.

FENCING.

Fencing has been added this year to the regular list of sports for the winter. It is Miss Hill's desire to make fencing a popular sport, and the classes are to be limited to a small number until the experiment shall be proved successful, as there is every reason to believe it will. The classes have been made up partly by invitation and partly from girls who are strong, or who have excelled in other sports. One event of the Indoor Meet, it is hoped, will be an exhibition of fencing, and a trophy will be provided to add interest to the competition. M. Fournon, who is one of the best fencers in America, and who teaches both at Harvard and at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, has been secured as instructor.

NOVICE ROWING.

On Tuesday afternoon, November 15, was held the competition for the Novice Rowing Cup, originally booked for November 1st, but postponed on account of the inclement weather. This trophy cup is given each year to the member of the Novice Rowing Squad who shows the best form and set-up, and the greatest individual skill, and the cup becomes the property of the winner. This year it was won by Rhodica Lovell of 1907.

ATHLETIC ARABELLA:
We sympathize with you, my dear, in having to wear a

ENRAGED EDITOR:
It must be wearisome to compose sermons every week. Frank-

“Mrs. Rover’s Hints to Newspaper Men” will be found helpful.

POPULAR POLLY:
You see you are worried about your Academic work because you have spent so much time at the ’phone. Perhaps the

AMABEL G.:
Baggage-checks are still worn, but the early fall seems to indicate that they will have a short reign.

BUTTERCUP:
You may, if you like, send flowers to your Junior friend, but you should not be hurt if she fails to wear them. You must remember that she may have received flowers from some other Freshman and that she does not wish to show partiality.

COLEMBINE:
Yours is a pathetic case, my dear young friend. You will find that your missing breakfast can be fully compensated for

DARK-EYED SUSAN:
No, you are right, you should not remain up later than three

PRUDENT STUDENT:
We commend your judgment in not consuming more than

MISS DOWNTOWN:
Yours is a question that we cannot answer in this column.
You should ask one of the stage-drivers, or the janitor of your

DIPLOMA:
The light blue silk will be lovely for an evening dress. Make it with a pretty little waist, short sleeves and a becoming skirt.
This style never fails to please and will be seen in the newest

FAIRY FLORENCE:
You should certainly know how to make fudge. Every well-bred girl should be able to. Give up your study period some evening and learn how.

OUTDOOR DAME:
We recommend weekly economic expeditions as a means of
