THE ITALIAN MARIONETTES.

The word marionette, a derivative of Mary, had perhaps hardly prepared our expectations for such a lively waggonload of puppets as visited the Wellesley Barn last Saturday afternoon. This company consisted of the grey-bearded Charlemagne, whom the cross-tipped, rubbed crown, magnificent lace collar, pink and gilt tunic, blue and gilt trousers, stampéd with imperial rank; Orlando and Rinaldo, his beloved nephews, most glorious paladins, whose red worsted plumes, gleaming armor and red and blue skirts made to look so much alike it took one a little while to discover that Orlando was of stuttering build and darker complexion, Rinaldo, in fact, being a decided blond; Bradamante, the flaxen-haired lady-knight, with flushed cheeks and a determined expression; Rug- giero, her Christian-born but pagan- bred lover, into whose big eyes had been painted the seeking look appropriate to a hero who goes hunting for his sweetheart through one of the longest epics of Italy; the two black Saracens, the emperor Agramante in his purple cloak, and the redoubtable warrior Rodomonte; Agra- mante’s three turbaned councillors; five mailed soldiers to make up both the Chris- tian and Saracen armies, and that lovely lady in robe of white and gold, with orange vest of stylish cut, and rosy veil floating from her coronet,—a radiant creature who seemed content, for her lot in life, to take what care she could of Bradamante’s horse.

The gallant steed itself should not be for- gotten, that mettled, mottled animal of amazing anatomy, its gray cloth hide set off by a genuine black horse-tail; nor the plump “green dragon tastefully spotted over with pink flowers; nor the little black devil, with his red fock, red hood, red mouth, red eyes and red horns, appearing in a flash of lurid fire.

The Italian chivalric epic has a basis of confused historical truth. It remembers Charlemagne, although it confounds him with Charles Martel, the actual deliverer of Europe from the threatened Saracen invasion. But by the time the French legends of Charlemagne had passed over to Italy in the prose romance, “I Reali di Francia,” the great emperor himself was represented as old and quiescent, while the splendid exploits against Saracen warriors were assigned to a group of twelve more or less fictitious peers, who circled and protected his throne, especially to that mirror of Christian chivalry, Or- lando, known in French romance as Ro- land. Toward the close of the fifteenth century Italy produced two remarkable epic poems elaborating the material of “I Reali di Francia.” Pupli’s “Morgante Maggiore,” taking its name from the giant Morgante whom Orlando persuaded, in his forcible way, to become a Christian, has an element of mockery, but Boiardo’s “Orlando Innamorato,” whose heroine, Angelica, is beloved both by Orlando and Rinaldo, is a frank expression of the true chivalric spirit. In 1570 came Ariosto’s “Orlando Furioso,” a tissue of many-colored adventures, in which even Orlando’s madness, caused by the infidelity of Angelica, yields in interest to the loves of Ruggiero and Bradamante.

What they recite, evening after evening, in that dingy little theatre on North street, the air heavy with bad tobacco smoke and multitudinous queer odors, seems to be an abridged version of the national romance. Even so, it takes all winter to play the story through, and the black-eyed boys of Little Italy go night after night for another chapter, paying the requisite five cents for a “kid-seat” and unconsiously drinking in, with each new turn of the narrative, chivalric ideals of courage and of honor. It is for them at once a course in literature and a course in ethics, poetry and morals, beauty and truth. So sympathetically do they enter into it that at times they cannot refrain from “heaving things” at the more outrageous Saracens, so that occasionally the proprietor, a brick-layer by day and an impassioned orator by night, has to break off his tide of declamation to bid the audience use his precious puppets with more respect.

It was not until after their arrival at Wellesley on Saturday, not until the stage was built and the luncheon eaten, that the Italians decided which episodes of their epic drama to select and fit together for the two performances here. At the last moment, young Giorgio, who speaks a tolerable English and was to have announced the scenes, turned bash- ful on beholding an audience of so many girls and flatly refused his office. So we had to make shift as best we could.

The first performance centered about Agramante, who, at the outset, was bewailing the absence of his two chief war- riors, Ruggiero and Rodomonte. Charle- magne was in like trouble over Orlando and Rinaldo, who, however, suddenly came prancing in, to his great comfort. Meanwhile Rodomonte, after the fashion of knight errantry, was holding a bridge exacting tribute from all who passed and rudely seizing the horse which Brada- damante, by her very elegant messen- ger, was sending to Ruggiero. Then came the bungling scene of Agra- mante’s storming of Paris, with his re- pulse and hasty retreat, together with his councillors, to the island of Lam- nesius. Orlando and Rinaldo, who had been foremost in the defence of Paris, followed up their victory by assailing and taking Agramante’s own capital city, Biserta, and pursuing him to Lam- nesius, where, after a terrible battle, Agramante was slain.

The second performance carried on the martial history, but with a new romantic element. Bradamante, being the most active of lady-loves, sets forth with sword and slav Rinaldo, finds the heartless horse she meant for Ruggiero, but meanwhile, Ruggiero, after a crushing encounter with Rodomonte, has recovered the horse himself. The misshapen lovers meet, but with visors down, and Bradamante, seeing, as she supposes, a stranger knight making off with Ruggiero’s horse, offers battle. After a very vigorous and skillful duel each other and joyfully take their way together to Paris, where Charlemagne, on Ruggiero’s promise to become a Christian, consents to their union. But Rodomonte, the ungraced lover of Bra- damante, is furious on hearing of their marriage, and flies on the back of his ally, the devil, to Paris, where the beauties of Charlemagne’s city amaze his bar- barian soul. He does not let slip his purpose, however, of challenging Ruggiero, whom he finds dancing at the wed- ding ball. Then follows a thrashing duel, in which these metal marionettes, weighing some fifty or sixty pounds apiece, hurtle against each other with a truly heroic disregard of paint and gild- ing, until, at last, Rodomonte’s wicked black head is severed (temporarily) from his shoulders. The closing scene stood somewhat apart from the main action, presenting a final, desperate attempt (Concluded on page 2).

The Saracen Salamanders is on the very point of treacherously stabbing Charlemagne in the back, when he is himself slain by the double-bladed Rinaldo.

Miss Coman and I would like to take this opportunity of thanking our many generous friends, especially the two Barnswallow presidents, for services before and after, and for most effective help during the performances, at the door, in the piano and at the lemonade bowl. The Library Fund is the gainer by more than one hundred dollars from the afternoon, and if any of our assistants will call upon us to turn to and help them in their efforts to make up own subscriptions, we shall be glad to do as we have been done by.

THE STUDIO RECEPTION.

Saturday evening, May 19, the Barn underwent its annual transformation from the bare, everyday home of the Barnswallows into the studio of the Tau Zeta Epsilon Society. The rough walls were hung in green; pictures, rugs, flowered and laminated copper and silver, carvings and beautifully bound books helped to give the proper atmosphere to the "one of the kind" which things of the college year. The society has been studying the Dutch, Flemish and Italian pictures, and was particularly fortunate in having a number of originals in the Boston Museum of Fine Arts from which to work directly. For the first time this year they have taken up the subject of backgrounds. The gold and decorative lettering of Van Eyck's Virgin in the Church of the Charles I were most effective and successful. Although each picture is unveiled twice, the time for studying the coloring, light and shade, the pose and expression of face is all too short, especially when the temptation comes, as it often does, to trace the resemblance of these Dutch and Flemish aristocrats and peasants to our Wellesley friends, and then—to wonder how they can hold so still. There is the disadvantage, too, of not being able to wander from one picture to another and back again at will. The Catalogue, in order of appearance was as follows:

   Model: Helen Newell.
2. Wife of the Burgomaster Meyer, Holbein the Younger (1495-1543).
   Model: Sarah B. Mitchell.
3. Portrait of Anna Maria de Schodt, Eysen Waterhouse.

Where the lighting was done from a candle or lantern in the picture itself the illusion was not so complete. They lacked the softness and depth of tone that the first group possessed to so marked a degree. Miss Doten's Charles I called forth a little stir of admiration besides the appreciative applause and buzz of comment that followed the others.

Wellesley is very fortunate to have seen so much of the best work of the old masters, and Tau Zeta Epsilon ought to be congratulated upon its success in arranging the exhibition. The Studio was open on Monday evening also.

COLLEGE NOTES.

At a meeting of the Southern Club on May 18, the following officers were elected for the year 1906-1907:
President, Louise R. Bascom, 1907;
Vice-president, Edith L. Seney, 1907;
Secretary, June Borrwn, 1908;
Treasurer, Martha Cecil, 1909.

On Saturday afternoon, May 19, students intending to teach had the privilege of hearing an interesting address on the need of college graduates in grade schools, given by Miss Carlisle, formerly associate professor of Pedagogy at Wellesley and now supervisor of the Boston public schools. This meeting was arranged by the Boston Branch of the Association of Collegiate Alumnae. Miss Carlisle emphasized the crying need of well-trained teachers in our public schools, the missionary and social work that can be done, especially in large cities, the unmatched opportunity afforded to know the lives of children, and the joy and pleasure which such work brings. She also spoke of the thirst of children for contact with a mind well-trained, and of the liberal culture a college girl might bring into her schoolroom. Girls who are thinking of becoming teachers ought seriously to consider this field, where there is so great an opportunity for doing social work and so urgent a need for liberally educated women.

The New England Inteiocollegiate Association held its twenty-fifth annual convention at the Copley Square Hotel, Boston, on Monday afternoon, May twenty-first. Several addresses were made. Mr. Fernald of the Harvard Crimson gave a very interesting account of the management of a daily paper, Mr. Fisk of The Tech spoke upon the important question of keeping in touch with the college alumni; and Mr. Boynton of the Amherst Student took up the question of editorials. A general discussion followed each of the addresses.

Seventeen delegates representing the ten following college papers were present: Trinity Tablet, Bates Student, Sepia of Brown, The Tech, Holy Cross Purple, Amherst Student, Bowdoin Quill, Wellesley Magazine and Wellesley College News.

Miss Louise Bascom, 1907, was elected Vice-President of the Association for the coming year, succeeding Miss Caroline Singleton, 1908, who has held the office during this year.

On Monday, May 21, a party of eighty members of the Zoological Department, with the instructors, took a trip to Nahant. The day was spent in seeing in their natural environment, the water animals, which have been studied during the year.

Miss Marion Savage of the Smith Monthly, who came to attend the Intercollegiate Press Convention in Boston, spent Tuesday, May 22, at Wellesley.

The regular mid-week prayer meeting was held on Thursday evening, May 24. The subject was "The Taming of the Tongue." Miss Florence Besse led the meeting.

Mrs. H. C. MacDougal gave a very delightful reception on Thursday evening, May 24. Members of the faculty were present, as well as guests from Wellesley and Wellesley Hills. A number of the college girls assisted.

On Thursday evening, May 24, Professor Wilcox lectured before the students of Zoology upon the life of Charles Darwin.

At vespers, on Sunday evening, May 27, an address was made by Professor Francis G. Pebody of Harvard.

The second annual opening of the Boston Wellesley College Club will be held at Wellesley College on Wednesday, June 6, 1906. A simple luncheon will be served at Cazenove Hall, at two o'clock. Followed by a brief business meeting. Later it is planned to walk about the grounds, visiting some of the new buildings and society houses which are to be open for inspection.

BIRTHS.

In Worcester, Massachusetts, May 10, 1906, a son, Albert Milo, to Mrs. Abby Fisher Shattuck, 1897.

In Providence, Rhode Island, April 9, 1906, a daughter, Elizabeth, to Mrs. Helen Behrens Bromley, formerly of 1906.

We, the members of the class of 1906 of Wellesley College, having received with deep sorrow, word of the death of Charles Biddle Johnson, desire to express to Mrs. Johnson our sense of the loss it has caused us to suffer, both as individuals and as a class.

Her beautiful unselfishness, her unfailing cheerfulness, and her ever ready sympathy toward all with whom she came in contact, won for her in class and college admiration and love; and brought to her responsibilities which she met with faithful service.

To know her was to realize her pure sense of honor, her loyalty, and the strong principles which she held and for which she worked with unceasing courage and earnestness. To be with her was to be stimulated to broader thinking and more noble ideals. The inspiration of Charles Biddle Johnson’s personality must remain a living force to those who knew her well, and those who might have known her have been deeply deprived by her untimely death.

In their sorrow, 1906 extends full sympathy to her family and to all who knew and loved her.

DR. HUME’S LETTER.

It will be recalled that in the winter we were gathering things for the two boxes to be sent to our missionary in India, Dr. Ruth Hume. A letter recently received by Dr. Barker tells us how welcome were these gifts.

"Last week I returned from Madibeshwar—a mountain resort where Dr. Hume sends her vacation— and found this treasure box, opened up the treasures and spread them over our guest room. What a sight it was! I placed two china, silver, sugar bowls, pitchers, teapot, cocoa and teapot, all the table things together. The shirt waist, table-linen, college seal, neck wear, books and pictures, etc., were on another table.

My friends think it is worth while to be the Wellesley missionary.

The box of provisions is most delectable. The canned goods will keep indefinitely; the cream of wheat, cornstarch, etc., we have divided among ourselves to use soon.

I am simply overwhelmed by the goodness of Wellesley. Thank you, thank you all."

MUSIC NOTES.

PARLIAMENT OF FOOLS.

I.
Some think Zoology is hard in college,
But not so I, oh no, not I
Some think the Labs give us some useful knowledge,
And so do I, yes, so do I
I love to spend my Saturdays dissecting
The long-dead cat, from soft door-mat,
And boil its bones and count the nerves connecting its lean and fat, poor pussy-cat.
Cat Lab, Cat Lab, just to work up there
Gives one such a cold bloodthirsty air,
Its dingy walls, its knives and bowls, and all its nauseous smells so rare,
It is not those whom science calls, this gruesome place appells.

II.
Some think that it is fun to hatch a chicken,
But not so I, oh no, not I.
Some think the lectures are too often stickin',
And so do I, oh no, not I.
I love to use the pipette very gently
On the live chick, that cannot pick,
And draw it up the tube so accidentally.
The primitive streck, so calm and meek
Slid'-ing, slid'-ing! the time we spend up there,
You'll all agree that it is hardly fair.
The 30, 50, 70, 80, 70, 50, 30, alcohol,
Oh, happy are those days which we so gladly will recall.

THE RUSSIAN PROBLEM.
At vespers, on Sunday evening, May 29, Mr. Tschanykobsky gave a very interesting account of the struggle that the Russian people have made for liberty. When the beaurocrats prevented the peasants from being taught, Mr. Tschanykobsky was among the first to give up his position and work at common labor so that he might live among the peasants and teach them without being detected. In order that no unsuitable reading matter should fall into the hands of the lower class, the government forbade that any books on politics should be printed under a given number of pages, thus keeping any discussion on social problems from falling into the hands of the people.

There have been three distinct periods in the Reform Movement; the pilgrimage to the People, in the seventies, which was an attempt of the university students to argue for the centuries of oppression; the epoch of reaction, which was twenty years of oppression; and the outbreak of revolution, which began about 1900.

Russia has had three crises in this recent struggle. The first was on Red Sunday, January 20, 1905, when 1,300 workin the Czar; the second, the Honeymoon of their liberties, in October, 1905,

Czar; and the third, the general

ovie of protest against this deception.

Mr. Tschanykobsky, who has been one of the leaders of the movement, and after whom the movement is named, has been an exile from Russia for the past thirty years. The dream of his youth has come true. The Russians are now realizing the hopes that men have ridiculed as chimerical.

This is a plea for suggestions in regard to speakers for the monthly missionary vespers next year. If you have heard any speaker along missionary lines whom you would be glad to hear at Wellesley, the chairman of next year’s Missionary Committee would be glad for a note giving the speaker’s name, denomination, special line of work, and address, when that is known. We hope to have various lines of home and foreign missionary effort presented by strong speakers, but it is not always possible for one small group of people to find the right person for a given subject, so we appeal to you for help.

What should an editorial be? At a recent meeting of the Press Club of College papers, this question was warmly discussed in a way that showed its importance in a man’s college. There, the editor aims to get at the heart of the student life, to give its best side expression and to give the paper a policy.—a vital share in arousing interest and directing an attitude on the question that most deeply concern the students.

The representative from the Harvard Crimson spoke of the importance of the editorialist representing a broad point of view and a sound one. For this reason, he said, the president of the board, who has the responsibility of writing editorials, always consults a number of the most influential men in the university before putting the question to the college public. There was also emphasized the necessity of the editorials’ being slightly in advance of the popular feeling, and the need of being open to radical tendencies.

The women’s colleges are behind the men’s in utilizing this possibility, probably because they haven’t the same interest in, or feeling for, the newspapers of to-day; but it does seem too bad to waste the chance of putting impartially before the college a consideration of the much-discussed problems. For example, what place more appropriate than the editorial column for expressing a definite student attitude toward the new library scheme, or toward the considered change in the time of society invitations? The editor, having discussed the question with the leaders of each side, could give the college as a tangible expression of the situation, not one based on “Well, all the girls I happened to talk with, think this.”

But if this should be favored, the question comes up, is a girl who has been in college only a year and a half fitted to be critic? Does she know enough influential girls or does she really know the college life well enough?

If one must say no, the remedy is readily seen by providing that a Junior instead of a Sophomore be editor-in-chief of the News, as is the case with the Magazine. Practically considered, too, the News editor has more responsibility than the Magazine Editor, for her paper goes to a larger public, her work is heavier, and the possibility of the paper’s taking an active part in College life is greater. If the Magazine needs a Junior for editor-in-chief, so does the News, if its is to become more than a sheet for the circulation of happenings—past and future.

This subject has been discussed with the News editors, who ask for replies and a frank consideration of the question in the Free Press column.

The students of the Department of Elocation are very much stirred up over the notice of their recital which appeared in College News. No one who did not take part in the recital can realize the amount of time and energy spent in it, not only by the students but by Miss Bennett. For two weeks and more Miss Bennett worked literally day and night to make this recital a credit not only to the Elocation Department but to the college as well. It seems hardly fair that, in view of the work put into this recital, the notice of its should occupy hardly a third of a column on the last page of the News, when a Barnswallow entertainment, a much less ambitious undertaking, is always given at least two columns on the first page. “Lack of space” caused individual work of a high order either to be passed over without notice or to receive a most inadequate criticism. It was not possible even to publish the cast of the scenes! Aside from the question of space, we feel that the criticism does not give an idea of the recital as a whole. From the article it seems that with two or three exceptions the work was of a mediocre rank, when I think it will agree that it was a most artistic performance and that Miss Bennett, as well as the students, deserves great praise for it.

Where do you put your old Magazines and College News? Until recently, if anyone had asked me that question, I should have answered, “Oh! when about so many have collected I usually throw them in the scrap-basket with the other old papers.” Last Easter vacation, however, I had an awakening. While visiting a relative who was ill, I happened to fall into conversation with the nurse. She was very much interested in college and kept asking me questions about our life here. She said that she had just missed going to college. “And so,” she said, “I have always read as much as I could about what I have missed. I often find bits in the newspapers about the girls’ colleges and always read them. And I try to keep on reading what I might have had, though I hardly know what or how, for the papers are rather—” And she looked up for something to express the attitude of newspaper reporters in regard to us and our doings. I assured her that their attitudes were often times wholly erroneous. And then the awakening came. “Did you ever see either of our college publications—the Magazine or the News?” I asked. She had not. Remembering a few that I had sent home, I ran to collect them. There was, in all, quite a bundle. When I gave the papers to the nurse, I am sure that I could not have expected to see one look happier over any kind of a gift. When she found the New Year’s Greeting that the English Literature Department sends out, her pleasure was quite complete. Her thanks was so sincere that I positively felt embarrassed. Now the copy goes to her as soon as it has been perused.

INTER-CLASS DEBATE.

The Debating Club will hold its final inter-class debate on Saturday evening, June second, in College Hall chapel. The subject is—Resolved: that Suffrage be extended to Women. There will be preliminary debates between the four classes, and the winners of these will be the final contestants.

The question for debate has been chosen in consideration of the fact that here in college there is little decided feeling either for or against Woman’s Suffrage. It is hoped that the girls generally will attend, not only through interest in the work of the club, but in order to inform themselves on this very pertinent question.

THE S. G. A. SCHOLARSHIP.

The scholarship of $250 maintained by the Student Government Association in the International Institute at Madrid has been held during the current year by Luisita Fuster, a member of the class of 1906. She is an excellent student and has won many "sobre-salientes" and "honorable mentions" during her six years' course at the Institute. For the year 1906 and 7, the Wellesley scholarship is awarded to Eloisa Gonzalez, a member of the present Junior class. Photographs of this Wellesley scholar are posted on the Student Government Association bulletin board this week. Senorita Gonzalez is a girl of unusual dignity and charm. Her father is a clerk on a small salary in the employ of the English copper mines at Rio Tinto. Without a scholarship it would have been impossible for her to secure that much coveted boon, a liberal education. A college course means even more to the Spanish than to the American girl. The public schools carry their pupils not much farther than our primary grades, and the opportunities to fit for teaching or other means of self support are few and far between. The graduates of the International Institute are demonstrating the value of a trained mind by helpful service as teachers, as nurses, and as wives and mothers.

Carolina Marcial, who visited Wellesley last October and addressed two student gatherings, has been doing valiant service for her college in America. She has spoken during the past winter at Mount Holyoke, Smith College and Radcliffe, at Rockford and the University of Chicago, as well as before the students of many preparatory schools. Her earnest presentation of the desire of Spanish girls for the privilege of higher education has won many friends for the Woman's College at Madrid. The membership of the International Institute League has been extended to the western colleges, and considerable money contributions have been received by our treasurer, Miss Helen J. Sanborn. The Senorita Marcial will return to Madrid to complete her college course and to take her degree in June, 1907.

GIFT FROM MISS KIMBALL.

The College is again indebted to Miss Hannah Perker Kimball for an addition to the collection of original sculptures in the Art Gallery. The new statue, which has just been put in place, represents Hercules; it strongly resembles a statue formerly in the Guistiniani collection. Fortunately, the incongruous restorations of the Renaissance have been removed from our figure, which though incomplete, represents the god as a youth, grasping in his left hand a lion's skin while his right probably held his club. This type belongs to the better period of Greek Art.

THE SOCIAL STUDY CIRCLE.

The Social Study Circle held its last meeting of the year Friday evening, May 25, at the Shakespeare House. Miss Dudley of Denison House, Mrs. O'Sullivan and Miss Hardy of Boston were present. During the early part of the evening Mrs. O'Sullivan gave a short sketch of her life at Hull House and her efforts in trying to better the conditions of the working girls in Chicago. She spoke particularly of the organization of Trades Unions and of the closed or contract versus the open shop. The rest of the evening was devoted to a discussion of the necessity of keeping alive one's interest in social questions under unfavorable conditions, and the practical way of applying that interest.

The desire of the Social Study Circle this year has been to learn more of that big movement which has taken form in the Trade Unions, the child labor agitation, and the Societies for the Prevention of Disease. The meetings are usually informal discussions, with occasional talks from people who have a practical knowledge of the subject. It is hoped that the Circle can be renewed with even greater vigor next year; and all girls who are interested in social questions will find the meetings of value.
