MUSIC AND THE EMOTIONS.

The lecture given by Dr. H. H. Britan of Bates College, on Tuesday, January 14, in Billings Hall, dealt with one aspect of the psychology of music, that of Music and the Emotions. In discussing the subject from the standpoint of the dramatic and impressive qualities of music, Dr. Britan pointed out a close relationship between music and the emotions. The sense stimulus, sound, is itself emotional. We sing our joy, sob forth our sorrow, and in music is a refinement of these primitive instincts.

The strong appeal which music makes in the result of very simple means. It seems impossible that a combination of rhythm, harmony, timbre, tempo and force could produce a great emotional effect. Yet rhythm will always hold a unique place of influence over the emotions. Barbaric people dance in rhythm; and an increase of tempo means increased pleasure. In its harmonic factors, too, music by a simple cause makes a profound effect. By the lowering of two semitones, change from major to minor key will alter a feeling of satisfaction or hope to one of sadness and yearning. Timbre, it is said, is due, to the number and character of the overtones. But psychologically explained, its significance is due to the long confirmed habit of giving meaning to intonation. All marks of tempo and force are expressed in such emotional terms as majestically, ardently, boldly. It is as natural for an excited person to speak faster as it is for the heart to beat faster, and music has only the example of nature.

Music, in its appeal, is the richest of the arts. The formalists insist that since the factors of music are indefinite, there can be no definite emotional response. But the connection between the stimulus and the result lies in the mind of man himself, and the indefinite suggestibility of music leaves us free to create our own ideas. This suggestion is the first law of the emotions. Another advantage which music has over the other arts is its dynamic quality. Music is varied and continually changing, while the plastic arts, considered in this light, are all still life. In directness and intensity also, music is superior. The plastic arts stimulate the emotions indirectly by the thought content, not directly by the sense qualities, and in proportion as an art becomes more intellectual, it becomes less emotional.

But there is a broader view of music than this merely dramatic. Music would be overbalanced by its impressive qualities, if it were not a true art. As such it demands certain aesthetic relations. Art is deeper than a mere arabesque, and subjects music to the same principles as the other arts—to such principles as unity, strength, and gracefulness of style. And by virtue of these aesthetic features music affects the emotions. Unity, for instance, means completeness. The mind requires this feeling of wholeness, and unity is a satisfying of this emotional demand.

Therefore, Dr. Britan concluded, music does derive value from its effect on the emotions. This is not its whole value; but in spite of the formalists, music does produce an emotional effect—crude in its lower forms, refined and artistic in its higher aspects.

DEBATING CLUB.

At a meeting of the Debating Club, held on Tuesday evening, January 14, at the Shakespeare House, a debate was held on the subject: Resolved, that Government Rate Regulation of the Railroads is desirable. The meeting was opened, and the debaters introduced by Miss Marjorie Rimmer, president of the club. The debate was then opened by the first speaker for the affirmative, Miss Mosenfelder, who spoke of the disadvantages of the present system of railroad government, mentioning the large number of accidents which now occur almost daily, and the rates so frequently and unjustly granted by railroad owners. She held that, under the present system, stock sent on the railroads was not cared for, and that, through competition among railroad owners, passengers were often subjected to great inconveniences. Thus she showed that state regulation of the railroads is not good.

Miss Mosenfelder was followed by the first speaker for the negative, Miss Benton, who refuted the argument that through government rate regulation more uniformity would be gained, in stating that equal rates would be impossible. Moreover, railroads should be managed by men who had learned the business at first hand, who knew every detail of it from long experience and who could be on the spot as the authorities at Washington could not. Miss Benton further stated that under the government, railroads would be more expensive to manage, and that railroad offices would become mere political prizes.

The second speaker for the affirmative, Miss Pope, then showed the advantages of government regulation. Improvements would be made; less money would be paid out in stocks; there would be no danger of strikes, for Unions could not exist under civil service laws; and there would be less breaking of laws, causing accident and loss of life. Moreover, industry, education, politics and all the business of the country was intimately connected with the railroads. Therefore, the railroads should be under government control, since the government should always assume new duties as the progress of civilization demands it.

The last speaker for the negative was Miss Scott, who dwelt on the great expense that it would mean to the government to gain control of the railroads, showing by statistics that, while more money is being spent on improvements of railroads than of any other department in the United States, the railroads still pay in taxes what amounts to 15 per cent. interest on the subsidies granted in the past by the government.

The rebuttals following the main speeches showed keen refutation, and were indeed the best part of the debate.

A vote on the merits of the debate was taken by the whole club, resulting in favor of the negative. Miss Willis and Miss McCarroll criticized the debate, stating that in matter and form it was one of the best ever held in the club.

Christian Association Meeting.

Members of the Christian Association who had previously heard Mrs. Labarre, were delighted to hear her again at the Thursday evening Christian Association meeting. Mrs. Labarre opened the meeting with a part of the 26th chapter of Acts, St. Paul's account of his vision, which, like all visions, was a call to service.

Mrs. Labarre told us of the service of a faithful old pastor in Persia, who was sent to an ignorant, neglected part of the country where the hardships were almost unbearable. He finally concluded that he was too old for the service which a younger man would be better fitted to, but, just as he was about to leave for his return home, a feeble old man caught hold of his coat and begged him not to leave them in darkness. Then he saw for the first time a vision of his opportunity, and did not shrink from it. Mrs. Labarre reminded us all of our various opportunities for service and the one great opportunity of prayer, definite and personal.

We could not but feel our responsibility when she told us of the suffering of Persian women through their ignorant custom and of the persecution and ostracism in Mohammedan lands of those who profess Christianity. Religious liberty, however, is about to come in Persia, and the last Sunday of the month is set apart as a day of special prayer, in which all are asked to remember, that these people who have been for generations held in check by the law may at last have it for their own, without fear of death.

EDITORIAL.

Somewhere Oliver Wendell Holmes says, "Beware of making your moral staple consist of negative virtues." Upon reading this the other day, a special application, in a rather far-fetched sense perhaps, flashed upon the editorial mind. To criticize Seniors! We acknowledge the supreme audacity of it, and hasten to state that the subject was suggested by hearing a remark from a member of the faculty.

We cannot quote exactly; the substance of the speech was this: in her experience, she found that the higher the class rank of the student, the more taciturn (in the classroom) she becomes, until by Senior year, she is content to listen in silence and serve, while the less experienced Juniors and Sophomores carry on the discussion which no amount of "leading questions" can induce her to join.

At first we were inclined to disagree, but upon consideration and from experience.

we had to acknowledge that there was justice in the statement. Freshman year we are, indeed, eager to impart every bit of knowledge and to share every bright idea that we have, and our hands go up at every question. But gradually, after many hasty conclusions and mistakes, we decide that perhaps discretion is after all, the better part of valor, and we reserve our opinions—at least until we are a little surer as to how closely they may coincide with those of the instructor!

It is perhaps unfair to bring this accusation to bear especially against upper classmen, but it is from the Seniors and Juniors that we naturally expect a shining example in the classroom, and it seems wrong to have it otherwise. But Sophomores are not exempt. We can remember a Sophomore English class, when the discussion of a certain piece of required reading was in order. Pertinent questions addressed to the class at large would call forth no response. Each one turned the pages of her book, settled back in her chair, prepared to take notes, and then looked around for somebody else to discuss the question. Outside the classroom, we had discussed this same book, with a good deal of interest. We had found that we held quite different opinions about it, and we had tried hard to substantiate these opinions as best we could. And yet it took many carefully directed questions to arouse any discussion at all in class. As a rule, we are very careful not to commit ourselves, until perhaps the instructor has given her criticism of the book, then some such remark as this is in order, "That's just what I thought but I was afraid to say so, because I wasn't sure that I was right!"

That is the great trouble. We are so afraid that we may not be right; that our opinion may not be the proper one! Whether our idea is the accepted, conventional one or not should make no difference. If our conclusion is one which has been arrived at after due consideration of the matter, then it is worthy of a hearing and, if challenged, it is worthy of an argument. And if it is proved to be a wrong conclusion, at least it is our own—and we have the inexpressible satisfaction of not having blindly taken down and accepted somebody's else opinion. Of course it is infinitely easier to sit still and say nothing, and, in so doing, we are perhaps making no mistakes, but is that not in Holmes' words a rather "negative virtue" with which to console ourselves?

COLLEGE NOTES.

The Shakespeare Society held its Masquerade at the Barn on Monday afternoon, January 14. At three o'clock, the merry company of gentle folk preceded by the nimble jesters joined in a grand march. All the people of Shakespeare were there—kings and queens and potentates—in Temple editions. There were satin-slippered ladies with pearl brodered garments, and gay macaronis with phumes 'i' their hats, and there were monks and witches and fairies. A quaint soiree had strayed into the company and Birmam Wood had come to Dunsmuir. After the march these gentle laid aside their old time stiffness with their masks, and a whirl of very modern dancing ensued 'til six o'clock.

The regular monthly entertainment by the College Settlement Association was given at the Denison House, on Thursday evening, January 16. The program consisted of a number of college "stunts" by Ruth Stephenson, Caroline Klingensmith and Susanna Annin, with instrumental music by Elizabeth Conant, Ruth Grimell, Ruth Sapinsky and Edith Wise.

Alice Clause, 1905, and Laura Kendall, 1907, spent several days at college during the past week.

The engagement is announced of Miss Gladys A. Brown, 1908, to Mr. Ashton Rollins, Harvard, 1901, of Dover, N. H.

A meeting of the Social Study Club was held at Agora House on Tuesday evening, January 21.

Mr. Alpheus H. Hardy, Treasurer of the college, will speak on "The Present Economic Crisis from the Point of View of a Business Man" in the Society Parlor, Friday evening, January 24, at 7.45 P.M., to the Economics Club. The college at large is invited.

Any Alumnus desiring 1908 Legendas will please send their orders before February 1, 1908, to Henrietta W. Roberts, 16 Norumbega Cottage, Wellesley.

Through the efforts of the Social Study Circle a roomy new Bulletin Board has been hung at the west end of the second floor corridor for posting items of economic and social interest. Clippings and other material for posting will be welcomed and may be left in the Economics Office 114, or sent through the resident mail to Miss Batch.

Two new books, just added to the lending shelf of the Social Study Circle in the Newspaper Library, are Bernard Shaw's new volume of plays "John Bull and his Other Island," and Henry D. Lloyd's "A Sovereign State." Mr. Lloyd's material for his Study of Switzerland was unpublished at his death and has been edited by J. A. Hobson, the interesting English Economist whom some of our alumni may remember as having spoken here.

Bernard Shaw's volume contains his much discussed Salvation Army Play "Major Barbara."

A mad Irish Priest's Definition of Heaven in Shaw's "John Bull's Other Island."

In my dreams it is a country where the state is the church and the church the people; three in one and three in one. It is a commonwealth in which work is play and play is life; three in one and one in three. It is a temple in which the priest is the worshiper and the worshiper the worshiped; three in one and one in three. It is a godhead in which all life is human and all humanity divine; three in one and one in three.

The notice of the students is called to the new time-table of the Boston and Albany Railroad. There are many changes both in incoming and outgoing trains. The new time-table went into effect, January 19.

MISS TODD’S LECTURE.

Miss Millie Todd acceded to the eager request of her friends, and spoke of her unique South American trip of last summer at the Observatory, Saturday afternoon.

In the short hour Miss Todd covered much ground, but so few features of the possible journey that she calmly selected to point out to the students the marvelous mountain and desert scenery, of the Aedes, and to describe only one or two of her thrilling adventures. She seemed to be only talking to us simply as in a parlor, but it was with an art which concealed, for we saw the color and forms she described, and shared with her the experiences.

She gave a vivid picture of the tropical jungle through which she passed in crossing the isthmus from Colon to Panama; she described the bird life along the coast, and described the “clouds of birds” they once passed through in which there were millions of wings. We almost heard the strange whir; she told of the curious performance she witnessed of a pelican feeding its young, where it seemed to swallow the young bird, and then when it had got enough of the fish in its pouch to shoot it out, a funny, dazed and gasping birding.

After steering two thousand miles south, along the west coast, across the equator, from the northern summer to the southern winter, in view of the profile of the Aedes with its color effects running through the whole chromatic scale, she landed at Iquique in Chile, beyond and above which, in the vast desert, Professor Todd and the members of the Lowell expedition had set up the 18-inch refractor through which were taken thousands of photographs of the planet Mars, which there blazed red in the zenith brighter than any star we ever see. Here she described an oasis made by irrigation, in the luxuriance of which lived her entertainers, the English director of the nitrate mines. Hedges of heliotrope high as a house; rose shrubs and vines which bloomed with thousands and thousands of flowers; tomato vines which bore all the year. The pictures she made us see of the views from the Observatory House of the southern branch of the American philosophical Observatory in Peru, were vivid. As they sat on the veranda they looked down across the river upon the city of Arequipa, whose history is associated with the romantic life of the noble Inca whom Pizarro conquered; or turning they looked up upon the sublime snow covered cone of El Misti, perfect in outline as the famous Fuji of Japan, but nearly twice as high. The adventures she told can only be suggested. An abstract is inadequate to bring them to their dramatic climax. She told how when she arrived alone at Iquique, by a tangle of mistakes, Professor Todd was not there to meet the boat. The U. S. Consul, alone on the scene, and rescued the lady just before the steamer must go, and the quay be locked for the night. She told how when the great pier of the telescope, weighing tons, was being landed, the tackle broke and it swayed back and forth over the deep sea and over the hatch and finally dropped into the ship so that the purposes of the expedition were not brought to a premature end.

She told how they ascended a mountain to the spot seven thousand feet above the sea level where the final battle was fought in the war which won the liberation of Peru from the Spaniards. Here the modern traveller, as the Spanish soldiers, experiences distressing mountain sickness, but above the dense air the astronomer wishes to look at the stars.

Professor Todd experimented with an air-tight box in which by pumps the atmosphere could be brought to the normal pressure. Possibly here at the opposition of Mars in 1909, the observer may look at the planet through little but the ether.

We could hardly help catching our breath when we heard that our observatory was tied to the cowcatcher of the engine which brought the train down from his dizzy height, over a railroad which leads the world in mountain engineering. Into the gloom of a hundred and more serpentine tunnels, and through into the light, looking down ravines deeper than those of the grand Canyon of the Colorado, this intrepid traveller rode to the lower levels. The speaker said she could hardly explain to herself the fascination of the great continent. Possibly her hearers could no better put it into words, but all felt the spell, even as she felt it.

Rebecca Ellis, ’05, Assistant in Astronomy, 1903-1907, has been teaching at Hampton Institute this year and has found the work exceedingly interesting. Her friends will regret to know that she met with a serious accident just before Christmas and has been in the hospital ever since. The last reports were favorable.

Miss Harriet B. Whitaker, ’04, has given up her position in the Lowell High School, where she has been teaching, Physics, English and Algebra this year, to take the position of Assistant Principal of the Wilson School in Nateick, Massachusetts, where she will teach drawing as a major subject.

To those who knew Theresa Stanton in her college years and who have cherished her friendship in the years which have followed, the unexpected tidings of her death on January 11, have come with a bewilderings sadness. No one ever studied with her, as fellow pupil or teacher, without feeling the impetus of her enthusiasm, the delicacy of her discrimination and the
For a HYGIENIC TREATMENT of the hair and scalp, or for a good shampoo, or facial treatment, try Madam Gillesepie. You will not only get first-class work, but will find quietness, privacy and refinement. It costs no more than you would pay for first-class work anywhere. Send for circular on care of the hair.

tirelessness of her effort. And no one ever knew her without realizing the rare combination in her nature of strength with sensitiveness. of daring with timidity of generosity with appreciation. She was. indeed, a lavish giver, and we, who were and are her friends, are assured of our lives are still enriched by hers and that we are still bound to her by a tie which the accident of death is powerless to break.

MARY WHITON CALKINS.
The following tribute is taken from the Manchester (N. H.) Daily Mirror: “The death of Miss Theresa B. Stanton, who for fourteen years has been a teacher in Manchester’s High School, comes as a personal bereavement, not only to the graduates of the school, who feel that to her loving kindness, unwavering care and unfailing judgment and tact, they owe in large measure the advantages their schooling in Manchester gave them, but to hundreds of parents and others who are interested in our school system and who have relied upon this accomplished, modest and faithful teacher and trainer to lead our children up to a higher level of endeavor and accomplishment.

“She was a rare teacher. She had all the qualifications of a teacher. She had natural ability of a high order. She had a fine education. She was completely devoted to her work. She was wise, judicious, tireless, kind. Her pupils loved her. Their parents had perfect confidence in her, the community believed in her and respected her, and it is a cruel blow which deprives us of her in the fulness of her powers and the height of her usefulness.”

The Christmas number of Die Glocke, one of the leading German periodicals published in this country, contains an interesting illustrated article on Wellesley College, written by Fräulein Hermine Stueven, of the Department of German. The same magazine contains a review of the book of poems “Fremde und Heimat,” published by Fräulein Stueven in Dresden in 1905. A translation of part of this book has been made for the Magazine, and will appear in the February issue, together with a number of the short poems.

The following members of 1907 are teaching: Abby L. Wingley, in the High School of Sidney, Ohio, Algebra and German, Minnie K. Hastings, in Storkey Seminary, Lakemont, New York, elementary branches. Letty Stout, in the Misses Allen School, Watertown, Massachusetts. Mathematics and Physical Geography; Vera H. Loomis, in the Central Grammar School of San Juan, Porto Rico, (address: Box 116, San Juan, P. R.); Rosina Bucher, tutoring two girls on a ranch near Crook, Colorado; Ethel L. Hersey, in the High School of Needham, Massachusetts. Mathematics and Science; Josephine Bean, 1907, is substituting in either high school or grammar grades as opportunity offers, in Wanaksaw, New York; Katherine von Ach is giving private lessons in music; Gladys Tuttle is employed as billing clerk and stenographer by the Tuttle Mercantile Company of Nampa, Idaho.
