The Memorial Service

The annual service in memory of Mr. Henry F. Durant, the founder of Wellesley College, was held last Sunday evening in College Chapel. The address was delivered by Dr. William F. Warren, whose intimate friendship with Mr. Durant qualified him to give us a more sympathetic and true knowledge of his personality and life than otherwise might have been given. He was a member of the first board of trustees of the college, and was with Mr. Durant during the first stages of organization, and has kept in close touch with the college ever since.

After Dean Pendleton read to us the thirteenth chapter of first Corinthians, which Mr. Durant requested should be read to the college on the first Sunday of each academic year, Dr. Warren made the following points in his address.

His theme was "The man whom we refuse to forget." In his introduction he said that our appreciation for the great work of the college is the expression of our love for him could be no more fittingly expressed than by a pause from our duties, for retrospection and an understanding of the noble achievements which inspired him in his beneficent enterprise. One element especially is very noticeable in his personality, and that is his great modesty. He requested a special promise that no college building should bear his name, and on the day of dedication he flatly refused a seat of honor and took a modest place in the back of the gallery.

Wellesley was opened on September 12, 1875, when Dr. Warren spoke at dedication services both morning and evening, the themes of his addresses being, "The Source of Ideal Life," and "The Master of Destiny." Mr. Durant did not speak at the college at either service, but the evening, before which Dr. Warren feels is the true beginning of the college, he spoke to the assembled teachers and told them his ideals for the college. His prayer must have imparted to them some of his spirit.

The opening day for work was one of much confusion and chaos. The teachers never having seen each other, had come together to organize and get into form a new system of work. These teachers had been difficult to procure, for at that time there were only two other colleges in the state, and those had been in existence only about two years. Trained college women were very scarce all over the country, so that Mr. Durant was compelled to accept another handicap. The question of the domestic organization was still another difficulty. The students, also, were to arrange themselves for domestic service. Girls who did not know each other at all and who were unfamiliar with work, had to accustom themselves to this new duty merely as an aside to their general college work. These first days were most trying to faculty, students and especially to Mr. Durant.

The first chapel service was led by Mr. Durant, who addressed the faculty and students, trying to impress upon them the earnestness of Miss Durant's life and the greatest advantages for the best and highest development of womanhood. This first service was so penetrated by his spirit and earnestness of mind that it must have given both faculty, students a certain impetus which they so much needed, when the success of the whole college depended on their energy and courage.

One of the most important matters of those first anxious days was the petition which Mr. Durant filed before the court asking for the grant of a corporation under the state laws. A renunciation was filed and Mr. Durant, who was one of Boston's best lawyers, pleaded his own case. His plea for the petition and his rebuttal of the renunciation were the most brilliant and successful. The case which was his last, was won, and gave Wellesley the rights of a corporation and the perpetual right to confer degrees.

Dr. Warren brought out the point that the influence of culture and refined womanhood about Mr. Durant’s life had determined, or at least helped mould his ideals for the college. His mother was not only a perfect home-maker, but was a very good linguist and in fact was talented in many directions. The woman who later became his wife of that same type, refined of mind and sympathetic, with keen perception and breadth of judgment. He had come to feel the possibilities of trained, intelligent womanhood, and from this realization was born his ideal for Wellesley College.

Christian Association

The first Christian Association meeting of the New Year was held Thursday evening, January 7. The President of the Association, Miss Cecil, expressed her regret that Miss Hazard was unable to speak to the girls as has been her custom, and said she felt very incompetent to bring any message which would substitute what Miss Hazard might have to say if she were present.

Nevertheless, Miss Cecil very admirably presented to the girls an important and practical subject as a help in beginning the New Year aright, "The Ordering of Our Lives." At college where we live together in the best possible way, it is not difficult to order our lives, for we have a common aim. Herein is the key to ordering our lives, to have an aim. It should be a steady, unyielding purpose. Therefore our lives must be unified, and the unnecessary material eliminated. And, in order to be productive members of society, a most important factor. It is a mistake to crowd our lives too much. Our own short time with Christ each day counts for more than half way work on committees. If, in the coming days, all our work were ordered with sincerity and fervor the New Year would count for much.

The kind of purpose to dominate our life is altogether personal and individual, There is no higher purpose than what Paul said, "For me to live as Christ." These words not only give us our aim but tell us how to carry it out. But we cannot carry out this high aim alone. By prayer alone can we order our lives as Christ's. If we are faithful in prayer and purposeful in our life, there is no end to the work that can be done in the coming year.

Miss O'Reilly's Lecture

Miss O'Reilly, State Commissioner of Jails, spoke to the members of Economics, on women prisoners, on Friday evening, January 8. The substance of her lecture was as follows: Women fall through causes not her faults. In Massachusetts, women in jails come from the immigrant classes, who, coming here poor and ignorant, are required to enter into and understand our complex social system. These women cannot live together more easily than singly, marry, bringing into the world children ill-flowered with mind. These children, born under the nervous exhaustion of their parents and undeveloped, make up the social waste of the great cities. Poverty forces them to work at fourteen years, and with no restraining influences, they early fall into crime.

Women claim that they never deliberately choose a life of crime, but are forced into it by misfortune or desperation. They are not the unattached, but the misfortune rather than immoral. Lately, in New York, the average wage of women has been found to be $8.50 a week, while that of girls is $2.90. This is not a living wage of course, and when ignorance, youth, weakness and lack of training are added to this, it is no wonder that women become desperate. Statistics show that forty-five per cent. of women, at arrest, have never been trained in any way, so that at times of industrial depression many are forced into crime. Besides lack of training, intemperance is one of the greatest causes of crime, in fact ninety-nine per cent. of crimes are due to alcohol. Bad hygiene and insufficient food drive most women to drink, since they crave it as a force producing food. Taking it constantly for stimulation, they become diseased and feeble. This develops the nervous diseases, which are so closely connected with crime that it is impossible to tell whether invalidism causes crime or crime invalidism. The consciousness that alcohol destroys is fatal to the working woman. She comes from a class that does not hide its emotions, and so she easily becomes hysterical and Social (morally) weak woman should not be asked to live out of jail. The sins of which we would notice and clear away in a moment, with the good of humanity and the college at heart. We have been so busy fighting our past faults, and so careful to guard against future faults in our institutions, that we have left little room for individuality in action, and little chance for any divergence of conduct from the good, preordained channels of our law and our conventionality. As a result, having cleared away big things to be serious about, we take ourselves infinitely seriously in the little that we move along in our well rounded grooves. The college is deadly in earnest, and hardly ever turns around to laugh at itself—because, well, advertisers and the public might notice something unconventional about it. It is all very well to be deadly in earnest about its work—for work is naturally rather a serious thing to most people, but the college sometimes makes mountains out of the mole-hills of its play. Play is for fun, and not a grim and zealous struggle. We are not implying that men are not more deeply absorbed in their play than we are. Their football and their frats are more colossal to them than our athletics or societies to us, for we have them more nearly in their proper places. But often we carry a conscience, a sense of duty or determination where we naturally would carry a laugh, and are very in earnest about our play. It is well organized, and sometimes we work ourselves to exhaustion over it, and are very troubled when things do not turn out as we wish. Miss Bates and Miss Coman spent New Year's day with Miss Hazard.

EDITORIAL
The College News is glad to be home again, in its skylighted office, and it sits down editorially to take itself seriously. Then it decides: what is the use of taking itself seriously, and urging the practice earnestly on others, when so many people here are wringing their foreheads already. It is amusing to watch the men’s college newspapers, with ours to notice the difference in the usual styles, particularly of editorials. They are jaunty and brisk, not to say sanguine when necessary, sometimes strongly in earnest over some reform, but hardly ever as troubled by conscience as we are. We sit at home to ponder over our faults, and worry a little about our morality; while they are out fighting or having a good time with a rare burst of laughter which we would stifle. If they are Kiplings, we are George Eliots.

The difference is naturally the reflection of the differences of the college spirit. We are finer, more considerate, and careful of our actions. They have a sweeping view which quite overlooks many roughnesses and faults in their college life.

Professor Margarethe Müller has gone to California on leave of absence. She will be away until mid-years.

It has been the custom for some years to hold the Memorial Service for Mr. Durant as nearly as possible on the anniversary of his birthday, February 20. The fact that this date falls in the neighborhood of the mid-year examinations, has interfered with the attendance of many members of the college who would be deeply interested in the service; and so, for this reason, the address in memory of Mr. Durant was given at Vespers on Sunday evening.

Several books connected with Mr. Durant's life and work, were shown in the library last week. One was a genealogy, another the address of the commemorative service in 1882; besides several addresses given by Mr. Durant himself. The latter included the one on James Otis.

In connection with English 6 a very interesting collection of old books written by Italian authors of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, is being exhibited in Billings Hall. The books are almost all rare editions, some of them beautifully illuminated, and of interest as illustrative of the period with which George Eliot's "Romola" deals. The collection, which is the property of the college, is not duplicated in America.

Debating Club

The Debating Club met on Tuesday evening, December 15, at the Shakespeare House. The debate was opened promptly with no unnecessary preliminaries, the question being—

"Resolved: That the establishment of the Boston Normal School of Gymnastics, in connection with Wellesley College, will be advantageous to Wellesley Athletics."

Miss Crossman opened the affirmative and based her proof on two points: first, that the establishment of the school would not harm the spirit in Wellesley athletics, and second, that the gymnastics would be of great value. In regard to the spirit in athletics she spoke of the different motives of the Normal girls and Wellesley girls in sports, the Normal girls working with a view toward teaching, and the Wellesley girls entering sports merely for the love of them. Miss Crossman maintained that the spirit of rivalry which must exist would only be a stimulus to greater endeavor. In behalf of the gymnastics, she dwelt particularly on the present deficiency in physical training with which we were already familiar, adding that the carrying out of winter sports, such as winter tennis, basketball, and running, would be most advantageous to Wellesley athletics.

Miss Norcross, the first speaker on the negative, while recognizing the advantage of the gymnastics, asserted that the price was too great to pay. She declared that public spirit was—against the establishment of the school and that in so doing, the present college loyalty for athletics would be destroyed. She spoke, for example, of the W's which would be awarded to Normal as well as college students. In closing she touched on the subject of dancing, saying that if the Normal School came in, Miss Hill's theory of natural dancing must go, and a stiff, unnatural, method taught by the school, and impossible for Tree Day, would be adopted.

The meeting was then thrown open for discussion and several points regarding the gymnasmium building, equipments, and methods of instruction were brought up. The rather hazy idea as to the relation between school and college, was cleared up a little by the statement from authority, that school and college would be united, the college merely being enlarged by a hundred or more students, who would live in the village, and be as loyal to the college and its interests as we ourselves.

The matter of dancing was again discussed, and while it was considered outside the question, as being an art and not athletics, the club was informed that 1910 had passed a resolution to continue Miss Hill's theory in natural dancing for Tree Day, and were to pass the resolution on to the lower classes.

The next speaker on the affirmative, Miss McDonald, in answer to the declaration that public spirit was against the establishment of the school, said that the reason for this was the ignorance of the majority in regard to the plans and methods of the school, and that the more definite knowledge we have, the more will we be in favor of their coming here.

The last speaker on the negative, Miss Sherman, restated the points already made in her favor, and closed by saying that the advantages of a new gymnasium would not compensate for the loss of harmony in sports and the loss of class spirit in athletics in general.

Miss Kilborne then criticised the contents of the debate and Miss Chapman, the form. A vote was taken with the result in favor of the affirmative.

The suggestion was then made that the informal discussion should follow the four speakers, rather than the first two, and being put in the form of a motion, was carried. After a short business discussion the meeting adjourned.
Acknowledgment of Missionary Box

All those who contributed magazines to the boxes sent away by the Correspondence Committee, will be interested to know that one box went to Rev. Graeme Davis, who is working among the lumber men in St. Ignace, Michigan, and the other to Mrs. Virginia Ily, who distributes them among the mountain people of Georgia. Mr. Davis writes in reply:

"The box sent by the Wellesley Christian Association has been received and is a munificent gift. Permit me to tell first of the personal pleasure derived. The Atlantic Monthly was once a choice companion, and to peruse recent issues, and, best of all, a few old and familiar numbers is affording delight that adds new zest to life. A number of people in my extensive "parish" will appreciate the Atlantic very much, and the copies sent will pass through several homes. "De Quebeck a Vive" was so dear to me for my childhood, which I have seen for many a month, and the two copies sent will find a welcome in some of the homes of the "habitants" French, of whom there are hundreds in this section of the country."

The copy of Jones' text-book in Latin found an eager and grateful reception at the hands of a boy who has asked to begin the study of the language.

The Outlook, Scribner's, Century, Good Housekeeping,—all these seem to answer nearly every demand made for magazine literature, and the demands are many.

We offer you the heartfelt gratitude of many lives brighter and happier for the kindness shown by those who contributed to the Wellesley box.

Sincerely yours,
Graeme Davis."

Miss Loder's and Miss Hatch's dancing in costume was enthusiastically received.

Free Press

A week or two before vacation, the whole college was groaning under the weight of countless quizzes. These are no doubt necessary and wise, but the difficulty is that all the instructors seem to favor this idea at the same time.

One girl, who has regularly seven classes on Friday, actually had five quizzes on one of those days. Others had four in one day, while three was a common number. No one can do herself justice under such circumstances. It is not fair on the students to be prepared for so many at once, by the time the second one has taken place, brain and hand are weary, and however ready one may be, it is almost impossible to express one's thoughts clearly and forcefully.

Might not a schedule be arranged so that all the quizzes in one department fall as nearly as possible on one day, while each department might know when the others were giving quizzes, and avoid too many at the same time? Those in advanced electives and in Freshman and Sophomore requirements could come at the same time; but otherwise, is it not a boon if Mathematics and English, or Bible and Philosophy could manage to avoid each other, and if three-hour courses which fall on Thursday could leave it free for the many one-hour courses which occur on that day?

Important—Mid-Year Examinations
All students who wish at the coming examination period to remove conditions or deficiencies, or to take examinations for advanced standing must make written application to the Dean for permission on or before Friday, January 15. (See Extracts from Legislation, Article III, 2.) These applications should be made on blanks provided for the purpose. These will be found in the Registrar’s office.

Attention is called to the fact that this regulation applies to those cases in which it is proposed to remove the condition, or deficiency, by a paper. Cards of permission to present such papers will be sent out at the same time as cards of admission to examinations.

No student will be admitted to examinations to remove conditions or deficiencies or to examinations for advanced standing unless a card of admission is presented signed by the Dean.

Students making application for admission to examinations for advanced standing must enclose the written permission from the Dean authorizing preparation for such examinations. If the examination for which application is made is one requiring a fee, this fee must be enclosed with the application. (See Extracts from Legislation, Article III, 4 and 5.)

Unless informed to the contrary, a student will understand that her application has been granted and the card of admission will be sent through the resident mail after the schedule of extra examinations has been arranged.

ELLEN F. PENDLETON,
Dean.
