Professor Huelsen's Lecture on Nero's Golden House

Tuesday evening, March 16, Professor Christian K. F. Huelsen, Ph. D., of the German Imperial Archaeological Institute in Rome, gave an interesting lecture on "Nero's Golden House." Professor Huelsen, who is the author of "History of the Roman Forum," takes the place of Professor Ogden at Columbia University until June. During his continuance at Columbia, Professor Huelsen offers a highly interesting course on Roman Topography; he also conducts a seminar on Roman Monumental Art.

Professor Huelsen first asked his audience to go with him to the main portal of Nero's Golden House, at which there stood the mighty gilded Colossus of the sun god, a statue of the emperor himself. The palace and gardens covered an immense area, spreading from the Palatine across the valley to the Esquiline. There was a large artificial lake in the center of the grounds, and endless porticoes and galleries joined the wings of the palace.

Within, the rooms of which we can have the best idea are the trichina or dining rooms; of these there were twelve in each of two different wings. Each was decorated in a different style and color, and there were adapted to various scenes and kinds of entertainments. The walls were adorned with the rarest marbles and gems, and works of art. One painter who especially pleased the emperor was forbidden to leave the palace in order that no one else should possess any of his work. Columns, medallions, carving, painting, all were used in their most perfect forms. The ceilings, too, were richly decorated. One was so constructed as to change the scene with each change of courses. Another showered flowers and another rare perfumes upon the guests.

The emperor's private apartments are supposed to have been still more magnificent, but less is known of them.

The emperors who succeeded Nero tore down large parts of the palace, opened the streets which the gardens had blocked, drained the lake and devoted the space and the spoil to public works. The Flavian Amphitheatre was built where the lake had been, and the Colossus was hauled by twenty-four elephants to a new place beyond it. This policy was pursued partly to win public favor, partly from really utilitarian motives, and partly because the practical Flavians could not appreciate the wonderful出来 creation of the aesthetic "mad Nero."

The neglect of the Dark Ages followed the destruction of Nero's successors, and the forgotten House was well nigh forgotten, till the Italian painters of the Renaissance found some of its buried treasures. The rooms which were not completely hidden by rubbish had been decorated by the finest frescoes which they had been. The painters copied many of the old decorations and destroyed some of them afterward in order that their own work might remain. It is to these copies and old engravings that much of the present knowledge of the Golden House is due.

Many painters who did not actually copy what they observed, used the motifs and color schemes in works of their own.

Lack of scientific system and means of engraving, indifference, and the unsettled conditions in Rome, have prevented a complete and accurate study of the Golden House, but it is to be hoped that such a work will be produced long before it is, and a trustworthy record made of the most wonderful structure of all time.

The Week-End Conference

The Week-End Conference which had just passed was a new experience in the life of our Christian Association. The question so often heard, "What is a Conference like?" has been answered and all who attended this feel especially grateful to the Conference leaders and for making it such a success.

Miss Pendleton opened the first meeting on Saturday evening, in College Hall Chapel. Miss Conde, one of the National Secretaries, spoke on the Secret of a Poised Life. This archetype is recognized as the characteristic of efficient men and women, and Miss Conde showed how this is the same as the purpose of the Conference.

This meeting was followed by the first of the Bible Lectures by Dr. Wilbert W. White, who spoke on "The Secret of the College Teachers Training School in New York City, and is therefore qualified to speak on Bible Study from wide experience both in the field of Bible study and in teaching. Dr. White told of his method in studying the book of the Prophet Jeremiah, by which a greater definiteness and therefore a more complete appreciation of its meaning might be gained. He told how he took each chapter, verse by verse, analyzing it under the head of Jeremiah's personality, the history of the times, Jeremiah's call, and his work. As a model lesson he used the sixth chapter of Isaiah showing the steps in Isaiah's call: the vision, the recognition of sin, repentance, purification, and so on. In this way Dr. White showed how to study the Bible by analyzing it both for the story and for the thought.

At the Sunday morning service in Houghton Memorial Chapel, Dr. Erhman, of the Biological Seminary, preached on the theme of the Conference from the text: "That ye may be filled unto all the fullness of God" (Ephesians 3: 19), showing how at college especially Bible reading may achieve this purpose. Dr. White's next Bible lecture, held on Sunday afternoon for the Providence College students, dealt with the fourteenth chapter of the New Testament, on the thirteenth chapter of the Old Testament. White diagnosed the structure of the chapter and explained the significance of the four questions asked and answered in this chapter. At Vespers Miss Conde, who has lately returned from the foreign mission fields, spoke on the situation there which demands a response from the Christian student. It is a crisis which needs prompt action; if our influence is not extended, the Eastern races will create a powerful and non-Christian civilization for themselves. The day closed at the summer conferences with short delegations from twenty different houses. The girls in each house conferred separately as one delegation, and helped each other, by telling informally the individual impressions and benefits they had received from the Conference.

Since "vision without action is weakness," the conference closed with a Christian work council Monday morning. Miss Dwight, a graduate of Mt. Holyoke, told first of the urgent call for the student to volunteer for service in foreign missionary work. Miss Conde then explained the many opportunities in which a student can go and of the great number of unfilled positions waiting there. Miss Conde then opened the problem, a call to them Miss Conde next spoke, when she told about the Y. W. C. A. work at home. A girl may enter this work either professionally as a secretary in city, college or state departments, or unprofessionally by interesting herself in the support of her own city association. Miss Conde then explained the great possibilities in training schools just starting which many of us remember hearing about from Miss Parsons some months ago. It is still a new movement, but it is rooted itself. At present the main centers in the East are at Lowell, Mass., and in New York. In three months from now the girls may receive training for any kind of Y. W. C. A. work, with experience enough given that they may enter the work at once.

We also heard about work in vacation schools from Miss Kate Parsons, 1911, who assured us a great opportunity for useful, interesting work along this line. Miss Parsons explained that the training schools are all presided over by a central committee. This committee draws its funds in the main from the colleges; but depends on the cooperation of the church in the supplying of rooms where the schools can meet. Miss Parsons especially urged that Wellesley endow one of these schools, stating that it requires something less than $300; and that if we should be able to interest the church, the Wellesley school might be started in the home town of some one of us, making others more convenient for us to give our active support to the movement.

Margaret Scott summed up all the different possibilities for Christian activity. Beside these professional lines of

College Notes

On Friday, March 18, Franklein Stueven gave a talk “Gleiche Stoße in Volkssieden verschiedener Länder,” before the Radcliffe German Verein. A poem by her, “Die Fabrik,” was published in the March number of “Der deutsche Vorkämpfer” (New York) and another “Die, Kletterstangen,” in the third number of Frauen Rundschau (Berlin.)

Professor E. W. Taussig, of Harvard, who will lecture Friday, March 26, on “The Tariff and Wages,” is president of The American Economic Association, Editor of the Quarterly Journal of Economics, and an eminent economic author. His “Wages and Capital,” and “Tariff History of the United States” are among his best known publications.

The Department of Economics and Politics at Bryn Mawr has a fellowship and two resident scholarships to fill, and desires applications from advanced students who wish to take higher degrees. For further particulars consult the Economics bulletin board, (first floor, center), or write to the secretary of Bryn Mawr College, Bryn Mawr, Pa.

Attention is called to recent additions to the books and papers freely offered to all interested on the lending shelf of the Social Study Circle. Borrowers will please register what they take in the book for that purpose.

(1) Raymond Robin’s address before the Chicago City Club on “Political and Legal Policies of the American Federation of Labor.” This is a very able and interesting account of the reasons why Mr. Gompers, Mr. Mitchell and Mr. Morris are under sentence of imprisonment and on the significance of the situation. Case references are given.

(3) John Martin’s paper on “Social Reconstruction Today.”

(4) The 1909 issue of the English “Reformers Year Book.”

(5) The minority report of the recent English Royal Commission on the Poor Laws and the Unemployed.

(6) Current numbers of the English “Charity Organization Review.”

The Department of Elocution announces three readings: April 16—Mr. Leland Powers will read the play: The Dawn of a Tomorrow, by Frances Hodgson Burnett.

May 5—Katherine Jewell Everts: My Lady’s Ring, a comedy by Alice Brown.

May 12—Mrs. Christabel Kidder: Pippa Passes, by Browning.

These readings are to be given in College Hall Chapel at 7:30. Tickets, one dollar for the course; single tickets, fifty cents at the Bookstore or at the door.

All these, Miss Slaterry called the gates waiting to be exchanged into Christian usefulness in the world.

Throughout the Conference, opportunity was given to any who desired for personal talks with the leaders. At a reception held Monday afternoon in the Shakespeare House, it was possible to meet the leaders informally.

Social Psychology
On Friday evening, March 10, Dr. Charles Judd, Professor of Psychology at Yale, delivered a lecture on Social Psychology before the Philosophy Club and their guests, in Billings Hall.

Psychology, said Professor Judd, is no longer working primarily on methods, nor is it chief interest experimental or physiological. It seeks rather, to investigate the many methods of applications. One might, in this connection, refer to the application of psychology to pathological cases, as illustrated in the Emmanuel Movement headed by Dr. Worcester, or Boston, and in the field of hygiene, the application of psychology to certain of the social sciences and their problems. The political economist, it is true, stunts denies this application, and attempts to account for social phenomena in a purely objective way, forgetting that human preference, comprehension, and coincidence in trade, all refer to phases of human experience indicating that the fundamental facts with which the economist deals are psychological in character. In spite of their denial of application of psychology to political economy and the social sciences, there is in the books on the subject, clear evidence of psychological facts affecting these theories. For instance, Dr. Royce in his work, "Social Psychology," gives great emphasis on the suggestion that directing and moulding the lines of our conduct, and Professor Sumner, though he will not admit that he is a psychologist, uses in his "Folk Way," certain conceptions in regard to modes of human behavior, that are psychological in nature.

After pointing out this use of psychological facts in books on the social sciences professing to be purely objective in their treatment, Dr. Judd then turned to the consideration of the application of psychology to the problems of credit and labor. Dr. Judd traced credit through the different stages of its development, from the perceptual stage, in which both parties felt the necessity of seeing the commodities to be exchanged, up through the gradual superseding of a clumsy medium of exchange, by some coin, and finally through the superseding of the coin by paper money. He pointed out that great mental development is involved in this gradual evolution of paper money, and that the acceptance of credit was made possible only because of the system of ideas we have worked out, that gives us confidence in credit. As for the second economic problem, that of labor, it has already begun to be considered from the psychologist's point of view.

Mr. Wright in speaking of a recent coal strike in Pennsylvania said that the trouble was due mainly to psychological causes. Economists are too prone to treat labor as an abstraction, and the laborer as a mere mechanism, neglecting, thereby, the most essential fact, that the laborer is a personality, a being whose conduct is colored by his specialized habit. They forget that the man who is not merely a worker in the mines, but was also made to enjoy some of the social pleasures. Another pet theory of economists, that fails entirely to recognize the psychological nature of skill, is the theory that no one group of skilled workers, who in prosperous times, may do their skilled labor, but who in hard times, should for the convenience of society in general, do unskilled work. But skill is a psychological process, a mode of behavior worked out through a complex organism of the nervous system, and if not properly civilized, it deteriorates. Hence it is only when the laborer as well as the economist comes to understand skill, that there will be a different situation in labor.

Dr. Judd pointed out that not only may psychology be applied to political economy, but that it is necessarily involved in all social phenomena; that sociology, science and history are all psychological in character. He also mentioned Wilhelm Wundt's "Psychology," "Language," "Religion and Myths" and the "Development of the Arts"—all of which subjects Wundt treats psychologically as a great contribution to psychology, and as having stimulated his own interest in the treatment of social life from the point of view of mental development.

M. Poète's Lecture
Mardi prochain, dit le sexte mars, monsieur Marcel Poète fit une conférence sur:"Paris au temps des Romantiques."
Monsieur Poète commencera sa conférence en nous rappelant que 1830 marque une évolution dans la poésie, la littérature et le théâtre. Nous reparlerons des sujets de Charlotte et de Lamartine, de Victor Hugo. Monsieur Poète nous dit qu'on ne peut concevoir le mouvement des idées en France, excepté dans le cadre de Paris et que pour bien comprendre Balzac, il faut se figurer la physionomie de ce Paris.
En 1830, c'était une ville enceinte d'une muraille d'octroi, coupée de distance en distance par des portes.
Les rues de Paris étaient étroites et malpropres et n'étaient pas toujours convenables. Au milieu des rues, il y avait des petits ruisseaux. Le pavage était rudimentaire et il y avait très peu de trottoirs. Les rues étaient très encombrées, car on y exerçait une quantité de petits métiers.
En ville, il y avait des marchés de taches de verdure et les fleurs ajoutaient à la gaieté et à l'agrement des rues.
Il y avait déjà beaucoup de magazines de nouveautés, qui attiraient les flaneurs. On donnait aux magazines des noms des pièces de théâtre, qui se jouaient à cette époque, comme:
"Le Pauvre diable."
"Le Maître de For" etc.
Les cafés étaient assez nombreux; ils étaient ouverts et les divers aussi. Dans les divans on ne pouvait fumer que le cigare.
Les voitures étaient très bizarres. On voyait des fiacres, des cabriolets a deux roues et des omnibus. On donnait aussi des noms aux omnibus des noms de pièces de théâtre. En 1837 on avait le premier chemin de fer, qui partait de la gare St. Lazare et qui aboutissait jusqu'à la Plaine. Le grand Paris, nous dit monsieur Poète, se divisait alors, comme maintenant, en trois parties:--
1. Le coté droit de la Seine est le quartier commercial, le quartier des affaires. On y trouve les Halles Centrales et la rue Vivienne.
2. L'ile de la cité et le milieu de la Seine. On y trouve, Notre-Dame et le Palais de Justice.
3. Les rives gauche, qui est le quartier des études. Il y a des conservatoires de musique et de danse.
Le coté droit est le plus développé.
Les boulevards étaient de très grands artères. La ligne des boulevards s'étendait de la Madeleine a la Bastille.
1. Le Boulevard était très animé; il y avait beaucoup de cafés et de restaurants. On y trouvait en 1830 la vie populaire.
Il y avait beaucoup de petits théâtres comme:--
Les Folies Dramatiques.
La Gaîté.
Le Cirque Olympique.
Le Théâtre des Acrobates.
C'était l'époque des Panoramas. On y trouvait aussi ;—

Le Gymnase
Les Variétés.

Et dans presque tous ces théâtres on jouait des mélodrames.

2. Le Boulevard des Italiens était ici le boulevard mondain on y trouvait beaucoup de chaleur et de poussière, mais c'était incommode le côté le plus Parisien. Il y avait l'opéra et le théâtre des Bouffes. On y trouvait des cafés et le fameux "Glacier Tontoni.

Monsieur Poète nous a très bien fait voir l'influence anglaise. Cette influence se traduit dans les moeurs et dans la vie même. Le petit tigre a la porte du café venait du mot anglais—"tiger" et on appelait les élégants "les fasionables"—mot qui venait du mot—"fashionable."

Monsieur Poète dit que la vie a Paris était une vie paisible et "bonenfant" mais Paris était, et est encore, une ville dans un permanent mouvement de travail.

Monsieur Poète a terminé sa conférence en nous montrant des projections du Paris des Romantiques.

Notice

The management of the Lake Waban Laundry wishes to explain to its patrons through the pages of the College News the cause of the odor which has within the past few weeks been noticeable on the returned linen. To remove all apprehensions and to answer anticipated complaints, I hereby state that the odor comes from a leak in the heating pipes outside the laundry. The mineral wool used as packing gives off when wet an odor of disinfectants and iodine. The air of the delivery room is permeated by this odor, and it is absorbed by the clothing. The same odor has been apparent at Simpson and Stone Hall when the pipes there have been in a similar condition. The odor should not be attributed to the use of acids, washing powders, and bleaching materials, for no such expedients are used in the Lake Waban Laundry.

I.

In these days when so many people are eagerly rushing into print to baffle the macabre character of our daily life, may I be permitted to say a word or two on the other side? It seems to me that it is only a few girls and not the majority in the college who find the work light and uninteresting and credit easy. Most girls, I believe, are doing good, conscientious-work from day to day are interested in their work and find few "snappy courses." There are very few people who can work on steadily, with no diversion, so most of us take time off now and then for recreation, but we settle down to hard work with a renewed interest and vigor. Perhaps it is a pity that it is the fashion for us to talk more about our play than about our work, but the interest in the work is there, nevertheless, and I believe that there is no present danger that Wellesley girls will adopt a boarding school attitude toward their work.

II.

It is not unnatural that misconceptions should have arisen with regard to the Boston Normal School of Gymnastics; but misconceptions can work mischief if not corrected soon. It is well to remember that the affiliation is primarily academic. Both are old institutions of high standing whose methods and customs are means to the same end, namely, preparation for complete living. Hence there is no more reason, I believe, that the two schools will interfere with each other in any way than Harvard Medical with Harvard College.

The statement has been made that the ideals of the two schools are different. Such an inference is natural, for none of the Boston Normal School of Gymnastics are misleading. It is no more of a normal school than college. The aim is not "to turn out teachers," but to "prepare for complete living" by means of the special training offered by physical education and other courses.

The affiliation ought to be mutual help and inspiration to the two student bodies. The college student body does not show its characteristic fair-mindedness or democratic spirit when it allows gossip, rumor, and personal prejudices to obscure its "point of view." So far as I know, no real effort has been made to find out anything about the Boston Normal School of Gymnastics from the student's point of view. It is always better to know than to suppose; and I am sure direct investigation would well reward interest. The girls of the Boston Normal School of Gymnastics need no comment; but the time will come when the college girls will be ashamed of their prejudices.

After all, there is much to be said on both sides, because of lack of official communication and the genuine fear of the goal of the work will win out in the end, particularly when it is found out that most of the misconceptions now current are nothing but "dreams" (bad ones at that) and theories.

III.

In reference to the editorial in the College News of March 17, on the deplorable condition of friendships in college, I would say that proper justice has not been done to the girls as a whole. It is very improbable that a girl with anything, but the most superficial qualities could indulge in a "convenient friendship." Constant association, even if only walking on the Barn and Vespers together, if any conversation is held, necessitates some exchange of ideas, and in this way leads to genuine, mutual understanding. No doubt there are many acquaintances that do not last, but on the other hand we can, all see many deep and sincere friendships which are bound to endure. The strength of college friendships is proved by the way in which Alumnae remain true to their college friends throughout life.

In reference to the editorial in the College News of March 17, on the deplorable condition of friendships in college, I would say that proper justice has not been done to the girls as a whole. It is very improbable that a girl with anything, but the most superficial qualities could indulge in a "convenient friendship." Constant association, even if only walking on the Barn and Vespers together, if any conversation is held, necessitates some exchange of ideas, and in this way leads to genuine, mutual understanding. No doubt there are many acquaintances that do not last, but on the other hand we can, all see many deep and sincere friendships which are bound to endure. The strength of college friendships is proved by the way in which Alumnae remain true to their college friends throughout life.
