IN MEMORY OF MISS JEWETT.

It is no easy task for us, the friends and colleagues of Miss Jewett in the English Literature Department of Wellesley College, to express our sense of loss; our grief for her abides in those deep places where words may not consider a sense which will not fade. It is strange that she should have meant so large a part of whatever was best and finest in our endeavor that it seemed at first as if the work could not go on without her, and the passing weeks bring but a keen sense of need. The world which, with her, seemed full of beauty and of meaning, without her seems stripped and bare. From everywhere the words of her students and her readers testify to the impenetrable worth of her achievement, both in the class room and in her published work. It has perhaps been given to few natures to express themselves so truly—a clarity of word and soul—so very self; her very look was an expression of inner loveliness. To that high courage, that ardent scholarship of unceasing endeavor, that fine poetry which is a truth-interpretor of visible and invisible beauty, that tender sympathy with all life, we pay reverent tribute. To realize how great has been the gift of friendship with one for whom we held no values save those of the spirit, how deep is the sorrow of so full of divine significance.

Signed for the Department:
MARGARET SHERWOOD.

The Department of English Literature, so sore bereaved last autumn, refrained from any formal action until the return of Miss Sherwood and Miss Shackford from Europe. At our first meeting of the second semester, the above expression of our love and grief for Miss Jewett was adopted.

The Department, longing to commemorate so beautiful a life and personality in some abiding form of beauty, plans to place in the east transept of the college chapel, in the south wall, a stained glass window. Among the suggestions for the design are two that especially appeal to us and on which we should value the opinion of Miss Jewett’s friends—something in the way of symbolism from “The Pearl,” perhaps with silvery tints, or one of the Dante angels that she loved. In her own “Divina Commedia” we find marked a passage (“Purgatorio,” Canto VIII, 28-30) that in translation runs: “Green as leaveslet just now born were their burnetts, which, beaten and blown by their green pinions, they trailed behind.”

A considerable portion of the required sum is already assured, but we should be glad to have any who have known and loved Miss Jewett join with us in this memorial. Money should come to the Secretary, Mrs. Delano, 178 Abbott street, will be acknowledged and added to the fund already deposited in the Wellesley bank. The amounts of individual contributions will not be made known even to the Department.

KATHERINE LEE BATES.

THE NEW SOCIETY PLAN.

Although the successive motions passed by the Society Congress have been duly printed in the Collegiate News, a loss formal discussion of the actual working out of the scheme is requested.

THE SOCIETY MEMBERSHIP COMMITTEE.

The Society Membership Committee consists of the Dean, two members of the Faculty, and two members of the Class of 1914. It is objected to this committee that the Dean is already overworked, that the Faculty elements are too rare, and that it is likely to find students who are not society members. In answer, it may be frankly admitted that this committee is an experiment, if not a makeshift. The Eligible List, depending mainly on scholarship, will have to be made up from records not accessible to student magazines. The work is to be done in the very beginning of the college year, and must be done by that time. The lists being drawn up, there must be other members of the Faculty to relieve her, as far as she will be able to help. If leading students who are non-society girls cannot be found, it may be necessary to find society girls who, as members of the college, can list the part in their own society. Should the time ever come when, as Miss Sherwood’s proposal of the other chief college organizations, the continuation of open meetings, before a board made up of the society presidents and the principal officers of Barnswallows—all the college societies are affiliated with the general play-association, it has been suggested that the president and vice-presidents of this association be held free from the obligation of our society, and that the eligible list, if having been made, be placed before the board for their approval. This plan in some cases slowly worked out through five long sessions, and earnestly commending it to the secretaries, was unanimous.

Signed for the Committee:
MRS. MARGARET DELAND.

Mrs. Deland’s fiction is always a pleasure, but to have it read to us by the authoress herself was little less than a luxury, as the large audience of Monday evening, April 4, witnessed. After her introduction, Mrs. Deland read a passage from one of two similar occasions she had been introduced as “the author of ‘Old Chester Tales,’” perhaps it would be most suitable for her to read a selection from them to-night. Those of us who had read “An Encore” before were certainly not displeased with her choice. It is perhaps the most admirable quality of the title is the perfect appropriateness of the title. Not only in the bare events of the narrative is there encore but also in the very wording and phraseology of the style in which it is written. The consistent repetition gives the plot an effect of balance which is both gratifying and harmonious. As a story, “An Encore” is especially adapted to oral reading; it is made up so much of delightfully spacy conversation which results from the novel personality. And Mrs. Deland’s interpretation of her work was anything but disappointing. She caught all the characters perfectly and could change from one impersonation to another, apparently without any difficulty. Her success in portraying each personality was aided by the range in volume of her speaking voice, but merely to her perfect understanding of each of her roles. It was through this sincere sympathy that Mrs. Deland obtained the results that the effects, which enabled us to see the romantic sprawling figure of Alfred Price ambling over the campus, the Copacetic enthusiasm, the suspicious, conscientious thoughtfulness of Mary North, the woman who “lived fiercely for another’s welfare,” Mrs. Deland also endores.

EDITORIAL.

Did you ever, in the midst of your busy college life, stop and remember how you thought of college before you came to Wellesley? It is rather amusing, is it not, in the light of the present reality? We all no doubt thought of it a good deal before we came, planned for it and dreamed of it, but our visions were not all alike. For some of us, at least, the name "college" was wrapped about with all sorts of dreams no less delightful than vague. It meant fudge parties and serenades, smart girls, pennants and poster-bedecked rooms, tea tables and a hundred and one more phases of college life that magazine stories delight in setting forth.

If we thought of work at all, it was as a sort of hazy background of courses in which we had always had a vague desire to dabble, but we certainly not to interfere with our "regular college course."

Perhaps another group of us had an entirely different idea of college life. We thought of it as a place where we would have the only thing worth while and where we would be able to carry on studies and research in a congenial atmosphere where the aim of everyone was in accordance with ours. We should have at hand a great store of accumulated knowledge and a great opportunity of increasing our own learning. This was to be our aim and our one ideal and we rather expected to find at least the majority of our fellow-students with the same notion.

Some of us were disappointed when at last we came to college and found the reality of college life. For some of us, indeed, the disappointment was a happy one—we found Wellesley so much better than anything we had expected that we were left with an inexpressible fund of enthusiasm for the college and all its members. But for others of us, the disappointment was not so pleasant. We found our ideas so revolutionized that we were not quite certain just what once we had started out with, but we felt confused and out of harmony, and a little bit pessimistic. We said we were disillusioned.

If we were, there's a cure for it, and we can not only recover from the disappointment, but come out of it with a deeper enthusiasm than all our dreaming could have inspired. Let us get a perspective—not such a very easy task when we are shut up in a community of our own and so greatly concerned with our own ideas and thoughts. It's hard under those circumstances to get a different point of view, but it's one of the quickest ways to knock out the supports from under discouragement and disillusionment.

You, who found, much to your surprise, that work, good hard work, was given an important place at Wellesley, that it was even possible for work—or the lack of it—to keep you from enjoying some of the things you had set your heart on—take a view ahead of your college life—do you think for a moment that your memory of the four years at Wellesley will be satisfactory or complete, if it results work superficially done and work done as a task with no sense of the privilege and opportunity that many girls would give everything to possess? Here we have a chance that we will never have again, a chance that can be other than appreciated, if it is only realized—and it will only take a little serious thinking for us to see it as a great opportunity. Try to put your interest into what you are doing in your academic work, even, for the sake of novelty, do a little more than you have to do—impossible thought—then you will come more and more to see that if you were disappointed in the reality after your dreams, it is because your dreams were incomplete. You will not have given up your dreams, they will merely have taken their proper place in the perspective, and Wellesley will be enough better than your visions of it than you could ever have thought.

And you who felt that you have found only careless light-heartedness and indifferent application where you hoped to be one of a great company of seekers after knowledge—suppose you stand apart and look at your college life as a whole, too. Do you not see friendships you might have made that have passed by you while you were absorbed in your one idea? And do you not think that you will long for them with a great longing when you have graduated with all the honors your college can bestow on you? Try to see your college life in enough of its entirety to know that it is a complex experience with many sides, and the opportunity for knowing and loving people is not one of the least of these.

No one would wish you to get less than you do from your work, but you are not getting all that you could out of your work, if in the getting you are living entirely to yourself. Having friends, and making yourself worthy to be a friend, is quite as much a part of your four years here. With this new point of view, you see that you too, have found college better than you dreamed.

So let us try to see our college life as a well-rounded experience, full of many kinds of benefits, and offering us the opportunity if we will only take it, of becoming in the fullest sense truly developed women.

phalized delightfully the pathos of poor "Cipher" and the utter forlorn impossibility of the dominantly feebly "Gussie." Against this depressing couple, the sensible, generous, whole-souled Dr. Lavender was brought into a most happy contrast, especially grating in Cyrus' interview with him. As for Letty, her vivacity and readiness were the life of the whole tale and throughout it her refreshing influence could be keenly felt.

The reading, as a whole, gave us the impression of becoming reacquainted with old friends; for Mrs. Deland's characters are always true flesh-and-blood people whom we have all known and enjoyed and of whom we are always anxious to hear more.

COLLEGE NOTES.
Professor Perrin of Boston University gave an interesting lecture on "Nathan der Weise," last Wednesday afternoon, in Room 128, before the members of the more advanced German courses.
Decaness Goodwin, Student Secretary of the Episcopal Board of Missions, visited Wellesley from Wednesday, April 6, until Tuesday, April 12. Besides leading the Christian Association meeting in the village, Thursday evening, she spoke in Phi Sigma House on Friday morning and in Agora House on Saturday and Sunday afternoon.
Mr. C. Park Pressley of the Boston Educational Register gave all students who desire to teach next year an opportunity for discussion of their work in the Browning Room on Friday afternoon.
One of the Thirty Students received an important meeting of the Athletic Association in College Hall Chapel.
On Wednesday afternoon, 1911 had a class tea at the Phi Sigma House.
The Class of 1911 had a class social in the Barn, last Saturday evening.

NOTICE.
A plea has come for books—preferably books of poetry, such as Tennyson, Whitier, Longfellow, etc.—from the Hillside School, an orphan home for boys and girls. Contributions may be left in the Christian Association Office, and will be much appreciated.

SHIRT-WAISTS AGAIN.
The opportunity for making good the sins of omission seldom comes to the omitting sinner. But for once the chance is here to justify yourself, and to make the best of a bad job. Notice is given that they will be in stock—"to make your idealism and your sympathy something more than pretty words." The neglected shirt-waists are again to be a reality; Thursday, Friday and Saturday, April 14, 15 and 16, from one to four o'clock. Colored shirts, formerly sold at $4 and $3.50 will be only $2.75. A three-days' sale, the publicity of bulletin board and News, prevent you from pleading ignorance of the present opportunity. If you approve the union label and that which it represents, you will do more than eloquently proclaim your approval,—you will give it your active support,—and active support means something more solid than a glowing apathy.

Individuality and style in footwear are always of importance. Our special efforts in this direction comprise an attractive display, introducing many new styles which will be used by all smart dressers for immediate spring wear.

MR. CABOT ON THE HOUSING PROBLEM.
"There is a popular fallacy that there are wicked landlords and wicked tenants," said Mr. Philip Cabot, in a lecture given to one of the Economic Courses 7, on Friday afternoon, April 8, "but I've never seen either. Both landlords and tenants are often victims of circumstance, but few landlords ever really grind the face of the poor.
Mr. Cabot, who, for fifteen years, has studied the housing problem in Boston and the vicinity, went on to say that the worst question facing social workers today, is that of congestion in the tenement district. The most crowded parts of the city are Ward 6 and 8, the North and West Ends. Here, the tenement district covers one hundred and three acres; out of this must be taken room for the people, as well as for churches, schools and public buildings, which either one of them would amount to only fifty acres.
On this fifty acres live forty-four thousand people, under the least possible sanitary conditions. The Board of Health is responsible for the lack of regulation in Boston as to the number of cubic feet of air necessary for each person. The minimum number of cubic feet required in sanitary boarding houses is four hundred, which is barely half of what one would get in a very small bedroom; and of the forty thousand, twenty thousand people have much less than this regulation amount. The effect of this bad sanitation must be exceedingly harmful on the public health, although statistics give no chance of it. Yet the United States census shows that in these two wards, there is an average of one hundred and forty-four people to one hundred rooms; this does not apply to bedrooms only, but to kitchens as well!
In these two wards values of land have doubled, while in Charlestown and East Boston, where "model tenement houses" have been erected, land is decreasing. People flock to the more crowded parts, where rent is cheaper; correspondingly, rents must be decreased in other districts.
If these conditions are to be improved, it must be accomplished through the working of an economic law. The motive of pity is too weak and nebulous. The Board of Health has power to deal with the situation, but it rarely takes the initiative in any action.
However, any action would only tend to raise the rent, and this brings a new problem—the poor are already paying all they can, and are forced to bear an increase. Whether Miss Cabot's theory is that, if a standard is set, to which many cannot reach, the number of foreigners crowding the tenement districts will be lessened; they will be forced to seek other occupations, preferably farming, for which many opportunities are open.

DR. GIFFORD ON "PRACTICAL CHRISTIANITY."
At the Christian Association meeting, on Thursday, April 7, Dr. Gifford spoke on the essentials of Christianity, emphasizing the power of words in the realm of Christian thought. The meeting was held immediately after the regular meeting. Dr. Gifford gave a lecture on "Practical Christianity." His two main points were:—first, be sure you are right, and second, seek points of contact. For since we live in a universe in which we can trust, we can rely on ourselves as part of that universe, and can therefore come to decisions which we know are right, through careful consideration. If we would be what we would have ourselves be, and do what we would have others do, we would soon find the necessary points of contact. Before we can reform communities we must reform ourselves and if we make the first point of contact with the home, the points of contact with the city, the country, and the world, will follow naturally.

ALUMN.E NOTES.

In addition to notes concerning graduates, the Alumnae column will contain items of interest about members of the Faculty, past and present, and former students.

A member of the class of 1907 writes as follows:

“I wish I could tell you what these two years of teaching have meant to me. When I left college I thought of teaching merely as a way of earning my living, but now I know it is a great opportunity for service. I enjoyed the two years so much, especially the last one. I only wish I might tell all the seniors now in college who are expecting to teach next year, not to think of it as drudgery, but as a splendid opportunity to influence boys and girls to true ideals of righteousness. I can’t begin to tell you how many mistakes and failures I made, but no amount of mistakes could take away my enthusiasm.”

The Boston Wellesley Club is planning to give next fall a large public entertainment, the proceeds of which will go to further some interest at Wellesley, probably the Students’ Building. No definite plan of entertainment is yet settled, but the committee in charge is attempting to secure a play of real literary and artistic value. It is hoped that by May 7, when the club will meet at Billings Hall, Wellesley, some definite plan may be ready to present.
