SIMPPLICITY AND STYLIZATION CHARACTERIZE NEW SCULPTURE

Defining modern as contemporaneous works since 1910, Mr. Nash of Nash Block男主雕塑 as possessing the three qualities of simplicity, stylization, and vitality. Mr. Nash gave the third of the Art Department's lectures on modern art on April 18, which provided illustrations of the work of many modern sculptors.

Mr. Nash said that the first to cast off the trappings toward photographic realism were the abstractionists of non-essentials, which typified the revolution against the mesmerism of the early nineteenth century, which held that naturalistic and impressionistic style exerted an influence on the painter that traits traits were causative composition, simplified and rough, the habit of the part of the sculpture in the rough and his impressionistic treatment which suppressed all non-essentials.

Another sculptor of the period just before 1900, Mr. Keating takes as a mission the laborers. His work is realistic but not photographic. He said simplification and treatment brings out the dignity and nobility of the worker, other spokesmen of simplification and elimination are the American sculptors like Mr. Mattil, Bourdelle, Bachtel, and Michel. Monticelli is spoken of as an exponent of the second characteristic of the art, namely stylization. His work is not to be used but to be used in patina pattern and he adopts his treatment to the medium he uses. The sculpture of Paul Manship, the American sculptor, is also characterized by stylization, and his work pays much attention to the use of line and his work is always decorative.

Certain German sculptors have endeavored to get an architectural effect in their work. A notable example is the ‘Fundamentalists’ book of 1910. The third characteristic of the 20th century is the valiant effort to find a new variety in technique ranging from the rough impressionistic work of Rodin to the high-minded and highly-polished marbles of Arp that are in the variety in technique ranging from the rough impressionistic work of Rodin to the high-minded and highly-polished marbles of Arp that are the chief characteristic of the art. By calculating the absorption curves of a single substance, the sculptor can plot the absorption curves of substances compounded of known simple substances.

The study of the absorption spectra puts the microscope inside the molecule according to Professor Frank P. Church, Head of the Department of Chemistry at Mt. Holyoke, who lectured Friday at 4:45 p.m. in the Chemistry Laboratory. In the absorption spectra work lies the connection between organic chemistry and physical chemistry. The absorption bands in visible light can be divided into two characteristic of the substance itself, it is also characteristic of the molecule. By calculating the absorption curves of a single substance, the sculptor can plot the absorption curves of substances compounded of known simple substances. The study of the absorption spectra of vapors has enabled the sculptor to find the varying centers of the molecule and its changing reaction with the atomic structure of the vapor. Thus the absorption spectra is the key to the molecule. In this work Professor Frank P. Church has been helped by his recent study with Professor Victor Edge of the University of Arizona. Professor Carr contracted his better by describing some of her adventures in Rumania last winter when she attended the International Chemical Union.

The character of Wellesley Sunday discussed in House

The operation of the present Sunday meeting rule has been one of the most important problems before student government this year. Senate, before taking a stand on the question, asked the students to express their opinions to the House of Representatives towards Sunday and Sunday observance. Ruth Duckworth Campbell '27, appointed by the Speaker of the House as chairman of a committee to investigate the attitude of the members of the House and to draw up a report of their attitude, unveiled the results of the same. The report was a history of Sunday legislation since 1912 when student could not travel on railroads on Easter without special permission. The history showed a tendency towards increasing freedom, but it was felt that these permissions removed only the restrictions not placed on an average community, and that this freedom would not continue to a degree to be desirable in the community.

What will Sunday be like?

The report ended as follows: "Sunday should be characterized by the maintenance of a spirit of quiet and restraint throughout the community. We realize that in a college as ours there are various opinions and beliefs concerning the manner in which Sunday is to be observed. We also feel that each individual is entitled to her own opinion and should be permitted to observe Sunday according to her own conscience, provided she does not interfere with others or with the community. Therefore, in order that these desirable particular quiet and rest may have it, Sunday observance should be set at a time in which no one shall be in the college in order to disturb the quiet of the college and the community. Quiet hours should be observed in the administration and college buildings and no sports or petticoats should be permitted thereon. Aside from such activities as those the individuals should have the privilege of worshiping and spending the time as they desire. During this time regular chapel services should be held on campus in order that those who desire such an opportunity for worship and study the privilege of so doing.

Just as we think there should be an time set aside for those who desire quiet and rest so there should be a time when those desiring silent reflection and recreation should have it. For this reason we believe that the remainder of the day the members of the community should have the privilege of spending as they desire aside from definite hour of quiet within the college."

This committee asks that we feel that individual will have moderation in their recreation so that the atmosphere of respect and dignity may be maintained.

This report was accepted by the House and was presented to Student Union, with a recommendation of a definite proposal for a change in the present Sunday rules. Majority opinion was added to the report, requiring the union of the faction exhibiting the minority feeling that Student Union should rest entirely on the wishes of the individual, and that of the faction who feels that more freedom on Sunday would not be opposing with proper respect for Sunday.

College Notes

On Sunday afternoon, April 23, at 4 o'clock, Miss Hettie Wright, Ph.D., of Chicago University, gave a lecture on "The Economics of Education" to some Economics students at Rock Hall. Miss Wright is a teacher in the school of Economics and Political Science in New York, and is widely recognized as an authority in this field. She is known to many as a very remarkable person. She is going to graduate work in these studies and also whether students will graduate or go on to special encouragement from her school than another.
“SHINING ONE”

The memorial service for Miss Mary Caswell, which is to take place next Sunday, is an event which will draw together old students and friends of Miss Caswell in common remembrance. Those who have come in contact with the delicate yet strength-inspiring influence of Miss Caswell will find reason for thinking of her as embodying the Wellesley of the SUNSET generation.

We call the attention of NEWS readers to the symposium on Miss Mary Caswell, originally written by Miss Perkins for the Alumni Dis/patch, which also appears on this page. We hope that a careful perusal of this symposium will strengthen our consciousness of what service and responsibility mean. It is in our acquaintance with persons like Miss Caswell that the wonderful, though not always seen, influence of the transcendental college experience may realign the permanence and strength of the Wellesley ideal.

ELISIUS RAFE

At no time is the female at Wellesley as elusive as when she is being tracked down by some one trying to get an interview for some purpose.

Whether the advertisements which ask for students have blundered their mark or whether the staff of the Office of Alumni Relations is a wily questioner who sets for a “yes” or “no” or a check can capture the popular answer, nothing is certain.

Somebody must be done to get a better proposition of Wellesley girls to de/ber to answer questions not marred by a threatening official scarecrow.

While it is not the world’s greatest mystery, it is not altogether immor tal. There are a number of questions which are not out of the question.

Alumni members of the Class of 1926 may be expected to be in the Situation. They will be in college or in the city. The news입니다 to be a considerable number of students. After the service, who will be at the Boarding house of the Univer/sity and are by no means unal-

The committee that claims this report was condoned by the need for action on the part of the student body. In order to have a more direct effect on the average student, the committee recommends that all members of the faculty be informed of the results of this investigation.

The committee further recommends that the reports of the Faculty Committee on Curriculum be posted at the Boarding House of the University in order to encourage the students to take part in the discussion of the questions raised in the report.

The three students mentioned above are students of the group that was/wise to publish the report and to invite the student body to participate in the discussion of the report.

The committee further recommends that the reports of the Faculty Committee on Curriculum be posted at the Boarding House of the University in order to encourage the students to take part in the discussion of the questions raised in the report.

JAPANESE PAINTING, COMBINES SYMBOLISM WITH DECORATION
A painting is an expression in visible form of a high ideal just as a poem is an expression in audible form of a noble thought. "This is the attitude of the entire mind toward painting," said Mr. Tomita of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts at his lecture at 24 Founders, Friday evening, April 21, on the "Pictorial Art of Japan.

Mr. Tomita stated that the Japanese art was a great and a very old art. Japanese art was the major part of its inspiration and tradition in the Chinese. Chinese painting and writing grew together from the photographic method of conveying ideas. The two forms of expression are inseparable.

He quoted Tomita in taking up the various phases of Japanese painting and split them into religious subjects. These pictures, however, resemble to the uninstructed, are the concrete manifestations of the attributes of Buddha. Contrastingly and Tomita had no great influence on religious art, but had contributed something to secular art. As the result of a school of two kiss certain artists gave up figure painting for landscape and birds. No effort was made to gain photographic reality. Simplicity and suppression of the non-essential were the first requisites. These paintings, rich in monotone, possess wonderful spiritual quality and interpretative techniques. They embody a symbolic idea as well as represent, the reality, romantic, and impressionistic schools, and beauty of Japanese prints. It is only recently that prints have been valued, because they represent a popular school.

Mr. Tomita's lecture was illustrated by slides of paintings, most of which are in the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, which has the largest and most collection of Japanese prints in the world.

PROGRAM OF STUDENT REICTAL

COMBINES PHASE AND POETRY

The first of the series of student recitals to be presented under the auspices of the Department of Reading and Speaking was given at Matthews House on the evening of April 8th. The recital began with the presentation of the Sonettra of Trounants by Margaretta McCarty. The poem is a monologue by a dying old woman, answering the call of her son who had been hungering for acceptance of a duty to rob the mill. The selection offered great opportunity for a wide range in expression and dramatic interpretation, an opportunity of which the reader did not fail to take advantage. Miss McCarty, without a doubt, gave the most outstanding performances of the recital.

Youngblood, the Deacon, by John Greenleaf Whittier, was presented by Geraldine Lang, subject: Jesus the Teacher.

Dorothy M. Miller's reading of Blue Berets, a short story by Elizabeth Ash, was received with much amusement by the audience. Marie Gans next read a poem by Alfred Noyes, "The Adonis's Ghost.

The Nightingale and the Rose by Oscar Wilde, presented by Frances A. Olin, tells the exciting tale of a nightingale who fashions a rose out of her song. The recital was brought to a close by Martha Biddle with a reading of Observation, by John Galsworthy.
