At the cottage, the greatest convalescence, he thought, would be the girl. He wanted to see her and hear her, and he therefore opened the door of the little house, though he did not know what the house contained, nor had he the slightest idea of what it meant. He stood before it, his eyes fixed on the door, and his heart full of love and tenderness. He knew that the girl must be inside, and he waited for her to come out. He waited a long time, and at last she did come out. She was a beautiful girl, with long hair and bright eyes. She smiled at him, and he smiled back. He knew that he loved her, and he knew that she loved him. He bent down and kissed her, and she kissed him back. And then he walked away, and left her standing by the door, crying and laughing all at once.

The girl was happy, and she was grateful. She knew that she was loved, and she knew that she was safe. She went into the cottage, and she heard the sound of voices inside. She opened the door, and she saw a man and a woman standing there. They were looking at her, and they were smiling. They were the doctor and the nurse, and they were the ones who had come to help her. They were going to take care of her, and they were going to make her well. She was happy, and she was grateful. the old lodging houses in the twelfth century and the familiar name of the Sorbon School, the interesting University of Paris.

In the summer there is a great mural painting, called "la Lumiere," which gives its name to the house. When we arrived there we found a great mural painting in the place where we were to stay. It was a great mural painting because it was painted in many colors and it covered the entire wall. The mural painting is called "la Lumiere," which means "light," and it is a symbol of the knowledge and the enlightenment that came from the Enlightenment era.

As we entered the house, we were welcomed by the charming atmosphere of the room. The room was decorated with fine furniture and paintings, and it had a warm and inviting feel. The walls were covered with paintings and the room was filled with the soft glow of candlelight.

The mural painting in the house was a representation of the knowledge and the enlightenment that came from the Enlightenment era. It was a symbol of the importance of education and the role of universities in shaping society.

We had the opportunity to visit the room that was used by the famous French philosopher, Voltaire. The room was filled with books and papers, and it was a testament to the intellectual pursuits of the Enlightenment.

To the Wellesley College News:

In desperation I plea—how can one kill professors? I appeal only after having been subjected to a number of official methods—such as cutting their wages, lengthening their working hours, delivering threats in the hallways, and even placing obstacles on their way to their desks. And I'm not alone in my complaint, as the hallways are now completely deserted, and the professors are found only in groups at the campus center. The aesthetic beauty of my meals is utterly ruined with all this constant noise and the smell of burnt paper

We define a gathering of students at Wellesley College as a collection of students who are present in a specific location at a specific time. The term is used interchangeably with "assembly" or "meetings."

A FARCE

In sitting through What A Man! one is tempted at intervals to exclaim severally, What A Play! There certainly is no other quite like it. That much one admits with alacrity. In the first place it is tremendously French. This, we know to be true even after the American adaptations dragged the farce heroically to the very side of the repast. In the other place the wild comedy ends with a truly tragic tale of sacrifice and devotion. Amusing, indeed. Oh, dear, yes. And so uplifting!

The story of What A Man concerns the anxious predicament of a worried man who was reported dead after a railroad accident but who returns five years later as his wife's hair dresser. He has no recollection of the past six years of his life. The story of the wife, who has meanwhile married another man, ends with her death, childless, and the poor husband with two husbands and two poor children.

"SUPPRESSED DESIRES"

"Suppressed desires apparently have the ability to break up happy homes whereas suppressed men are apt to send one to an insane asylum. It would seem from the play "Suppressed Desires" that Barn gave at the reception on October 11th that the play was chosen with the aim to please. It was successful. Moments, when the players were few to make "stephen" mean "stephen" and Brewster mean "lieutenant," when there seemed to be a strong desire in dropping a dish, when Stephen decided it was not the time to leave his wife when his inactivity had not come back, and when he advised Brewster to keep on suppressing her desires, were hilariously funny.

Hein Steiner placed her part of Harriet, Brewster's, an agent upholder of psycho-analysis, from whose lips "hibernation," "Bible," "compliments," "piritual moral codes" came without a father, with more than a little skill. In fact, so well did she play it that it did not seem as if she were in any way acting a part. Her connection for Stephen and Mabel, her enthusiasm for Dr. Brewster and her later anger at him for his treachery to her when she had brought him so many clients were cleverly and convincingly done.

Peg ölly, with her usual ability in playing a man's part was Stephen Brewster. More than her lines amazed the audience. Her attitude at her desk during Henelyetta's and Mabel's conversation was more than worth watching when she stretched her head with a ruler. Her sarcastic trade against Hegesia was excellent. Mabel, the poor, naive, and "four-eyed" daughter of Hegesia, was charmingly and appealingly played by Julley House. Her role of helpless femininity made us profoundly sympathetic with, and laugh at, the ruthless title of psycho-analysis.

One cannot possibly forgive a few hesitant lines when one considers the extremely short time given for rehearsing and the enthusiastic way it was given and received. So with a successful reception, Barn- shoves has begun a new year.

Out From Dreams and Theories

THE PERSONNEL INTERVIEW

The Personnel Bureau is now organizing for the coming year its personnel of interviewers. On October 1st the Director began her conferences with the class of 1931, and to be followed in December with the class of 1932, and about November 1st, the Associate in the Bureau, Miss Davidson, will be at the College for conferences with the class of 1933. At this time, therefore, it is well to consider two questions that naturally arise: Why is there a personnel office? Why is it here in relation to college appointments?

From the very nature of the present day personnel work, which exists primarily for the understanding and guidance of the individual student, it is evident that the interview is "the heart of personnel work." It is a means of informing individual preference, problems, needs, which may thus be constructively formulated by the student, and referred for all those in a position to assist. As has been pointed out above, one of the purposes of personnel work, Professor Husband of Dartmouth College, personnel work is primarily for the student, and it is only by a full appreciation of personnel conditions that the kind of guidance for the future can be found. This student and personnel faculty, purposes of advice or inspiration, is primarily for the guidance and education of the student. It is in true, as the student has been and of the faculty, that personnel work is an attempt to get at the "driv" that motivates him, and the "why" that rules his function.

In regard to the status of the personnel office at Wellesley, the Administration of the College has announced that there will be, in addition to academic appointments and therefore be kept with the same office of the personnel. At present, it is to be expected that Miss Davidson will be available in the office for appointments, which she herself has agreed to keep.

In the position of the personnel that Miss Davidson has been so helpful to the student in the minds of those who come to her who is their that their opinion depends upon the cooperation of the student in this attempt to fit information and guidance to his individual need.

APPROPOS OF VOCATIONS

At Oakland, California, last July, there assembled for its sixth annual convention the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs. This national body, as we understand the fact that there is such a federation, its strength increasing year by year, is ready to ally with similar organizations in other countries in an international federation. At the present president is Lena Madesin Phillips, who has been editor of the Personnel Bulletin and who, dealing with the work of various well-known women of today, is a member of the American Association of Professors of Personnel Management.

The personnel office at Wellesley is open to all students who are in need of information and guidance. It is located in the office of the Personnel Bureau, and is under the charge of Miss Davidson.

WEN MANWARING VIEWS RARE COLLECTION OF JOHNSTONIANA

Although one rarely connects ocean voyages with literary pursuits, Miss Elizabeth Manwaring of the Department of English recently found the two not incompatible. While returning on the Majestic she was fortunate enough to meet General Ralph Inman of New York, noted as an enthusiastic collector of Johnstoniana, who had, with a view of manuscript binding, published, just returned from the South, a unique collection of Johnstoniana which was presented to the College of Johnstons.
