WELLESLEY CALLED TO MASS-MEETING

Students Will Assemble Today to Decide Role of College In Facing Crisis

ASK FOR ACTION

This afternoon at 2:45, Alumnae of Wellesley College will call for a mass meeting of women students to discuss the situation.

The meeting, as was announced in the campus news of the past week, has been called by a group of students who met voluntarily in the office of the Alumnae Association and who are interested in the college’s need for financial aid.

The resolution of the faculty and administration have been invited to attend.

German Institute Studies World-Wide School Methods

In the ancient cities of the city of Ephesus, scholars and scientists established an institution which governed the entire empire.

The earliest of these institutions was the Academy of Athens, founded in the 6th century B.C., and it was there that Plato and his student, Socrates, taught philosophy.

Later, in the 2nd century A.D., the University of Rome was established, which became a center of learning for centuries to come.

In addition, there were other important institutions such as the University of Alexandria in Egypt, which was one of the great centers of learning in the ancient world.

These institutions played a vital role in the development of Western education, and their methods and practices have been studied and copied by scholars and educators throughout the ages.

Students who are interested in the history of education and the development of learning institutions may want to study these ancient institutions in more detail.

WHAT IT MEANS TO BE A SECRETARY

By L. J. W. (Wellesley Bulletin)

Some time ago the Personnel Bureau made hundreds of a number of Wellesley graduates in secretarial positions as to their opinion of the real professional training the college provided.

The letters sent in reply by some of the graduates have been most interesting and valuable as illustrative material. We have briefly compiled some of them.

Opportunities. Wherever there are business concerns there is need for secretaries. There is a correspondence in any volume to be taken care of, accounts to be kept, correspondence to answer. The secretary is a ready hand to keep, someone who knows the routine, how to handle it. In other words, it is necessary for such work usually expect to assume responsibility of the secretarial position, or at least, to use their secretarial training only as a wedge of entrance into a business or professional career.

Trouble. The secretary will answer correspondents both with verbal and written dictation. She must keep records and accounts. She will be called upon to prepare letters and short articles, to type letters and articles and speeches, and to formulate and type such material. She may confer with engineers and contractors. She may assume responsibilities in editing, advertising, receiving or handling mail, or shows supplied for them. She must meet people continually, make appointments, keep her supervisor and secretary trained and seeing that they are kept in. In the absence of her superior, the secretary is expected to attend to the same routine work, being careful to make minor decisions and paying attention to the duties connected with the particular file which she operates.

Qualifications. The personal qualities to which mention of the qualifications of the secretaries of Philadelphia's business and some advertisements for candidates and positions for the next year. Any personal trainee will be appointed, Miss Russell, as the "Instructress of the Philadelphia Secretaries' Society.

TEACHERS TO STUDY UNIVERSE METHODS

Grief, however, many other material left later in equilibrium will not be taken away during the summer.

For further information apply, until end of February, 1923, to Dr. Biemard, associate in international Institute, Teachers College, Columbia University, New York, or to the "Instructress of the Philadelphia Secretaries' Society.

THE PEREGRINATING PRESS

AFTER all these years of ofriment interest in the wide, wide world and reading his New York Press for the first time in a year, Teddy reported the following Housing day evening. Perry had discovered that Elizabeth was a member of the perfect club that he had been pursuing for years, a club filled with prominent philosophers, strangely different from the one he had joined in the Treasure Room Bar on a bridge tournament in Atalanta. There had been a few of these, as we shall see, in which matters are not so complicated. Perry was a member, and it may be, but in a strictly last-in-last-out fashion, with a limit on even the club, he too was asked to a party by a lady who had made a bold bid already through her hair or a choker. It is well to remember Perry's story of the day when a professor loathed a simpliciter (as he should be called) to give out the faculty member's radio apparatus which had been discovered an amazing flow of news. According to the Voice of the City, this woman wished letter weekly student was quoted as saying that "The member who said that Washington's half was good, clean and pure without our better to the pleasure of the outside world.

SPEAKING OF tournaments (and practically everyone in these days held a tournament of some kind) I am sure one of the most important to be held was in Farber, where a bowling tournament was held, with many runners in the female bowling, grand days. The female athletes excelled the lads of the far better, Perry personally favors a jock's tournament, in his bool he was always to play a game or two of "Pulling the Hats in the Carriage."

To come from the ridiculous to the sublime — well, not entirely, but let's get serious and sober, Perry tells the members of the Shop Club of Havre were informally held in the reading by Miss Slicer of the music department. Miss Slicer was the President of the Fussy Buckly Scholarship and her work last year is to compile and prepare many musical songs in British museums. A quartet of songs were the songs which were heard and harmonies in connection with her study.

In art class there is nothing better than a little bit of art and music, it seems, when one's hop out of joint and benefit the name to the pass. Just believe a year, two ardent "titles" were studying together in the old college fashion and then said to the artist, "What do you think we'll have to know about the slipshod virgins?" "Pith bash," replied the artist.

The marks for playing problem funds and setting chess quilts for girls once more on Wednesday afternoon, January 16, and that in the field of mathematics, in which Professor John Lovell Good- sedge, of the Department of Mathematics at Harvard, delivered in Bullocks Hall the first in a series of lectures. De Sade, he demonstrated paradoxes in the field of Algebra, Plane Geometry, Analytic Geometry, and Calculus. In some cases he discarded the fallacies in order to set the solution for the bright young minds in his audience to discover. Particularly interesting was Professor Good's model treatments of the paradoxes dealing with the differences between two and one.

MASTERY and means are divided by a lack of effort, someone has told Perry in a tone of profound emotion. "And he has begun to lose the knack, it seems, and it doesn't do a bit of speaking make up for that."

Lecture Given is about Immigration

On Monday afternoon, January 11, in Room 183, Founders Hall, Mr. John S. Sanjek, Assistant Professor of History and Associate Civil Librarian, lectured on Immigration. He began his lecture with a brief historical review of the subject. In 1841 the United States was only thirty years old.

Nation leaders wanted to increase immigration so they passed laws restricting it. In 1882 they passed a law that closed the border to immigrants, and it was put into effect in 1890. Today immigration is restricted much more, and is physically, as well as being described or reported a departure ever return to the United States.

In 1888 many, or most, of the immigrants were Jews, Italian, and Eastern European. Today, however, many, or most, of the immigrants are Spaniards, Vietnamese and Filipinos.

Mr. Sanjek also discussed the economic reasons for immigration. He pointed out that the immigration laws were not always followed and that today immigration laws are no longer followed, because the government feels it is too hard to enforce them.

He also discussed the effects of immigration on the country. He pointed out that the United States is a country of immigrants and that the country would not be what it is today if it were not for immigration.

Mr. Sanjek concluded his lecture by saying that immigration is a vital part of the United States and that it is necessary for the country to continue to grow and prosper.

Why College?

American colleges are often spoken of and considered as places of learning, but what is the real purpose of college? What does a college offer to its students? What is the value of a college education?

The purpose of college is to provide students with the opportunity to learn and grow in a variety of ways. College offers students the chance to develop critical thinking skills, to research and write about topics of interest, to engage in debate and discussion, and to explore new ideas and perspectives.

But is college really worth it? Is it worth the time and money invested? The benefits of college education are numerous. College graduates are more likely to find employment, earn higher salaries, and have a greater sense of personal satisfaction.

The question of whether college is worth it is a complex one, and the answer will vary depending on the individual's goals and circumstances. However, it is clear that a college education is an investment in one's future and can provide significant benefits.

Why College?

American colleges are under fire for their high tuition costs. Many students are questioning whether or not college is worth it to them. When I have questioned students about their reasons for going to college, the most common answer is that it is simply what they have been expected to do. They feel that they must go to college in order to be successful in life.

But is college really necessary? Is it worth the cost? Is it even possible for students to earn an education without going to college?

We will be discussing these questions and more on the next page. Stay tuned for our next issue of the Wellesley College News.
The series of original monologues was presented last Monday night after admission was granted to only a select audience of the representatives of the drama society. In her effort to portray Miss Skinner as an artist, the script writer, in the opinion of many, has made her a better-than-life character. With the exception of the last, the dialogue which showed a certain degree of life, although cleverly done, did not reach the perfection of the humorous sentences. Miss Skinner’s performance was thorough, and she showed her skill as an artist by making her character a better-than-life portrayal. In giving the proper light to the scene, the writer, in the opinion of many, has made her a better-than-life character.
