During the evening, Coolidge, her fiancé, John Harris, and the students of the senior class were entertained at a dinner in the College Hall. Miss Coolidge was escorted into the hall by President Coolidge, and other members of the faculty and the senior class were present. The dinner was a great success, and the reception of the students was very enthusiastic. The guests included the President and Mrs. Coolidge, the senior class, and several other notable guests. The dinner was served in a large, elegant hall, decorated with flowers and candles. The guests were all dressed in their finest attire, and the atmosphere was one of excitement and celebration. After the dinner, the President gave a speech, expressing his gratitude for the hospitality shown to him and his guests. He then led the group in songs and toasts, which were met with much applause and good humor. The evening ended with a dance, and everyone left the hall feeling happy and satisfied.

BIBLIOFILE

In this, the first edition of Lawrence letters we can catch more than a glimpse, at times we see the personal life not only of Lawrence but of his friends and contemporary, Aldous Huxley. The letters are rich, they give us insight into much of Lawrence's life, his writing and his friends. We can see through his eyes the natural beauty of the world, so often forgotten. Flowers, forests, rivers, fogs and shadows, he knows and understands them all. In a letter to Edward Garnett he writes: "Give me Bavarian landscapes when the sun shines and the pine woods are dark with glistening tree trunks, and suddenly, the red-skinned limbs of a gossamer thiefesse itself into the best, out of the shadow, and do go trotting through the sun-shrapped." In every letter he gives new version of the earth outside and around him.

These letters, presented with his thirty years of life, begin in the December of 1899 and end with his death in February, 1933. They include portions from Marlowe's Snare, 46, London, which was first published in 1901, and letters from West Australia, Cornwall Italy (his beloved Italy), Monza and Austria. His correspondents were many and varied, yet to most of them his letters were sent year upon year in unfailing friendship. Sometimes he
