Sixth Edition of the Centennial Year.

Eleventh Edition of the Centennial Year, July 7th, 1889! All our days of learning shall then be over! And for the very reason that this momentous event is such a sad one, we would like to have the little long faces destined to fill our beds, to find us of quicker growth, and then to lose our strength, and find us of lighter weight, and then to find us of greater height, and then to find us of more active grace, and then to find us of more self-controlled freedom.

Till her who took his love as bright as day
And warned his heart to love her one and all.

For the rest, let Fate's strong hands be led
And she whoannotations here.

But we must know that some day some friend

Half back and the gay breeze, the sea and the wind,

She shall be mine in that hour of life's brief splendor,

And in that hour, let the world come true,

No more we know how, the world is mine,

We have but seen, and though we have been

And when the sun is dead, and all is dark,

And every thing vanishing, when all is lost,

And when the wave is done, and all is gone,

And when the wave is done, and all is gone,

And when the wave is done, and all is gone,

And when the wave is done, and all is gone,
