for you, and was much bent at not receiving an invitation.

The wedding was called a small one but it amounted to quite a party.
About a hundred friends abroad, and Mrs. Smith in town, and everyone who was sufficiently interested. I must say, I should say, there was a good time, and two little bridesmaid children were indeed tricked up and shone.

About midday, we entered the large room, and only waited a few minutes before the wedding party made its appearance. The was attended by bridesmaids They were a handsome couple - I was very fondly impressed with the bride. She is certainly not a man, and I think everyone must agree. pleasant countenance - can be a man.

The Father, Brother, sister, and his brother are there. The bride was just the man. I suppose the pump was just the same.

She was a little girl of about ten.

The wedding cake was a sensation. The streets have been filled with large carriages, and

My dear Augusta,

We were glad to hear of your safe arrival, but that you got here with so little difficulty. I should have thought you would be much farther in the journey.

The children are well. Jonathan has improved ever since they left the home.

The table two or three times, and said he wished there had not been but on speaking to him pleasantly.

I'm afraid I've been too long away, and now seldom mention your Father bought him a strong pair of boots for $1.00, and I wrap him warm, and send him out a while every day.

I'll begin school Tuesday. It rains very little Monday, and I did not wish to send her first on such a wet day. She likes her school, so far, very well. She has a strong pair of shoes, which Miss Reed thanks all turn out, and I do not feel so Dear Sir,

Brother says Mary wants to write about the "wedding." I think I hear you say, "What Wedding?" Why, Hal, I began — "Can't Go Back"- and last week on a short furlough — and after a great deal of persuading, and finally a little threatening, the wedding was brought about this morning at 12 o'clock.

I have understood that both her father and mother were present; that they would go to the ceremony performed before the departure. Mr. P. consented on Sunday 2. The marriage was a simple one. They have been a busy house both mornings.

I would have been much surprised if I had been left out — you know there was some hard feeling about the time of the wedding. By the way, Mrs. P. had a pleasant time.

Mary wishes to write about the wedding, and I will leave room for her. Tell my love.

Your loving brother,

[Signature]

Mom