Dear Miss Whitney:

This is my mother's birthday. She would be ninety-five.

We are inviting friends to celebrate the day by doing something to help the Woman's Journal - if possible, by taking a share of stock; if not, by making a gift toward the expenses of carrying care, especially when you are not feeling well. I do hope that you are now better.

Yours always affectionately,

Alice Stone Blackwell.

on the paper. The stock is $100. per share. It is full paid and non-assessable, and involves no responsibility beyond the payment of the $100.

I know that your money affairs have not gone prosperously of late, and perhaps this is an altogether unreasonable request. If so, you must forgive me for making it. I did so on the chance that you might be able to respond without inconveniencing yourself. If not, of course I should not want you to do it. But the reform papers always have a hard pull to get through the summer, and the printer's unpaid bill is causing me much concern. In such a difficulty, I turn to those old friends who would probably be willing to lend a hand if they are so situated that they can.

I hate to add a strain to your
