Dr. Heilperin Will Lecture On Autarchy

Departments of Economics, History Offer Talk On Self-Sufficiency

At the invitation of the Economics and History and Political Science Departments, Michael A. Heilperin, expert in international economics, will explain the "Economic and Political Aspects of 'Autarchy'" Monday, December 4, in Pendleton Hall at 4:40 p.m.

Dr. Heilperin has published books, pamphlets and articles in English, Polish, French and German. Le Probleme monetaire d'apres-guerre et sa solution en Pologne, en Autriche et en Tchecoslovaquie appeared in 1931, Monnaie, Credit et Transfert, in 1932. International Monetary Economics has just been published in both French and English.

One of Dr. Heilperin's first pamphlets was L'conomiste et le monde contemporain (1932). The League of Nations Institute for Intellectual Co-operation published The Monetary Aspects of the Raw Materials Problem and the Revival of International Trade in 1938 and International Monetary Organization in 1939, two of his more recent studies.

Dr. Heilperin is also contributing author of Economics of Inflation by H. P. Willis and J. M. Chapman (1935), and The World Crisis, by the professors of the Graduate Institute of International Studies (1938).

For additional enjoyment there will be either games or a fancy dress class. Mr. Victor De Bellefroid, manager of the Weston Saddle and Bridle Club, who has instructed the classes and who will also act as ringmaster, will give an exhibition of handling horses.

Cookbooks Reveal Honorable Art Of Eating also Popular in the Past

By Josephine Bonomo

Turkey, cranberry sauce, mince pie, and all the other fixings sound pretty good to a Wellesley girl in 1939, but they would have been just an appetizer to the hearty souls who lived and wrote cookbooks two centuries ago. From the collection of old cookbooks bequeathed to the college library by Mrs. Caroline Maddocks Beard '92, come "receipts" and menus to make the dietitians' hairs stand on end.

Mrs. Mason's Cookery or Ladies' Assistant for Regulating and Supplying the Table devotes half of its pages to bills of fare designed to provide appetizing originality for the dinner table. Mrs. Mason starts out modestly with "family dinners of five dishes" (simple little meals that we might have here at college, such as the one of boiled pork, roast turkey, greens, salad, and "pease pudding"); and then works up through seven dishes, nine, thirteen, fifteen, and seventeen to her grand climax of nineteen dishes and a "remove." This meal includes cray fish in jelly, melon in flummery, stewed pigeons, stewed cucumbers, potted lobster, an awful lot to do. But the play is Pygmalion—

When asked if she had decided on her major, and on what she will do after college, Nancy reflected a moment, and then said that she hadn't. "Plans are uncertain," she laughed, "although I do think I'll major in languages at Wellesley. I'd like to teach for a while, and then take some position, perhaps that of Dean of Admission in a college, in which I'd be dealing with people. That appeals to me more than straight teaching. But I'm not going to be a career woman all my life!" Tennis is Nancy's favorite sport. "I love the game," she said, "but I'm not very good at it." However, she came within one match of winning the all-college tournament this fall, being defeated only in the finals.

Eadith Bell

Eadith, whose home is in Cincinnati graduated from Hutes High School, which has an enrollment of 3000; she confessed that Wellesley hadn't seemed very large to her. "People coming from small schools are just overwhelmed," she said. "But what really impressed me about Wellesley was its lovely campus and the architecture of its buildings."

Author to Deliver Hart Fund Lecture

Dorothy Fisher Will Talk On the Art of Creative Reading, December 11

Speaking on "Something About the Art of Creative Reading," Mrs. Dorothy Canfield Fisher will deliver the annual Sophie Hart Lecture at Pendleton Hall, 8 p. m., Monday evening, December 11.

A descendant of many generations of New Englanders, Mrs. Fisher was born in 1879 in Kansas where her father was teaching. She studied in France and this country. After her marriage to John R. Fisher, she and her husband went to live at one of the Canfield farms in Vermont, on land that belonged to her family for many generations. Mrs. Fisher is a Ph. D. in romance languages and the first woman to serve on the Vermont Board of Education.

Her first novel, The Spirel Cage, was followed by an educational study, A Montessori Mother, Hillsboro People, a collection of short stories dealing with Vermont people, and another novel, The Bent Twig. While doing war-relief work in France, Mrs. Fisher wrote Home Fires of France and The Day of Glory. Her latest works include The Brimming Cup, Rough-Hewn, Her Son's Wife, The Deepening Stream and Basque People.

In addition to a display of 650 dolls dressed for poor children by skilled student seamstresses, there will be numerous exhibits both by Wellesleyites and by outside charitable organizations. The exhibits, arranged in a ballroom decorated after the manner of Santa Claus' workshop, will be of a nature suitable for Christmas gifts.

The committee in charge of the Bazaar is headed by Myra Ann Craf '40, Chairman and Business Manager, and Rose West Carroll '41, who is handling the publicity. Lorraine Manny '41 captains the poster-makers, while Hortense Allen '41 has charge of the decorations. Finances are in the hands of Marian Stearns '40, while Adelaide de Beer '41 heads the food

Three Societies to Hold Fall Program Meetings

Three of the six societies will hold program meetings Saturday night, December 2. Agora will discuss the foreign policy of the United States. The subject of Phi Sigma's meeting will be the works of Maxwell Anderson. Z. A. plans to read aloud some drama of city life among the lower classes, possibly Sean O'Casey's Within the Gates.

T. Z. E.'s meeting, scheduled for Saturday night, December 9, will concern Florentine painting. Also on December 9, Shakespeare will present a scene from The Merchant of Venice, as well as brief discussions of various aspects of the play by members. A. K. X. will not hold a program meeting until after Christmas vacation.

Orchestra To Offer Annual Fall Concert

Program Will Include Solos By Joseph Haroutunian, Marian Gibby '41

The Wellesley College Orchestra will present both the humorous and more serious sides of music in their fall concert in Alumnae Hall, December 6, at 8:15 p. m. Mr. Joseph Haroutunian will introduce the lighter portion of the program with a song from a light opera entitled The Town-Burber by Schenk, and an aria from Handel's Acis and Galatea. Miss Marion Gibby '41 will be the soloist in the serious half of the concert, the Concerto in E major for violin and orchestra by J. S. Bach.

The orchestra, under Mr. Malcolm H. Holmes, will open the program with the Overture to the Secret Marriage by Domenico Sinigaglia. Eighteenth century satire, directed against inferior composers of the period, will be demonstrated in A Musical Joke by Mozart. The composer has introduced absurd dissonances into his classic style, and includes in this work a minuet with ridiculous "mistakes" in the horn parts. The Orchestra will also perform three movements of Copriol Suite by Peter Warlock, a group of old English dances arranged with modern harmony.

Mr. Haroutunian, a member of the Bible department, is to appear for the first time as soloist with the orchestra. He made his Wellesley "debut" as a bass singer in the production Princess Ida four years ago. In 1938 he sang the role of the high priest in the American premiere of Gluck's opera

Constructive Criticism

Much of the student spare time is proverbially spent in airing views about the college courses. Students in all academic institutions such as Wellesley should have a vital interest in the academic life of the college and so long as discussion is directed toward the furthering of that interest, it is healthy and valuable. We believe that student criticism generally is of this type, but unfortunately there are always exceptions.

When criticism ceases to be constructive it ceases to be valid, and it is derogatory opinion, not thoroughly thought out or backed up with suggestions for improvement, to which we object. Students who sit in their dormitory groups and grumble about courses and professors are often not justified because they are not familiar with the seasons and the factors involved in the thing which they criticize. These complaints are, it is true, just as frequently completely justified. The only fault we have to find with such criticisms is that it seldom goes beyond the dormitory and reaches the people whom it concerns most.

There are other channels open to the student for expression of opinions all more effective certainly than are her classmates. The faculty are, of course, most directly concerned with the value of the curriculum to the members of the student body. All the faculty want to make their courses as stimulating as possible and welcome suggestions for improvement. They are also anxious to help students settle any problems raised by these courses. They are not only glad to hear student opinions but they are glad to know that they have opinions at all. So also are the Dean of students, the Class Deans, and the faculty advisors. The News' free press column is another effective organ for criticism and suggestion. And representing the students themselves is the Student Curriculum Committee which aims to adjust the college curriculum, in so far as is possible, to the greatest advantage of both the students and the faculty. We suggest that students make use of these, the proper channels, for the expression of constructive criticisms, and complaints.

The Single Transferable Vote

The success with which the Village Juniors report the use of the single transferable vote in the Freshman elections for major class officers points to the feasibility of the installation of this system in other class and all-college elections in the place of the single ballot now used. In the single transferable vote system of election, each girl votes for two girls out of the three which remain after the primary elections. These votes are marked in order of preference. When the votes are counted, they are divided into three groups of first choices; the girl who receives the least number of votes as the first choice is eliminated from the running. The ballots which indicated this girl as first choice are then redistributed according to the second choices marked on them. Thus the students whose first choice has been eliminated may vote again for the other two candidates. The possibility of a weak candidate winning because of a split between two strong nominees is removed.

Although this system requires slightly more time to count the votes than does the present single ballot system, the method warrants this additional effort. An enlarged Elections Committee could be enlisted to take care of a mechanical difficulty of this type. The second vote which the single transferable ballot allows those students whose candidate has the least number of first choices assures the election of the candidate desired by the most voters. The method is more efficient and thorough than the present election system, and as such is worthy of consideration by the student body.

The Laws of War

Mines and torpedoes sank 28 British, French, and neutral merchantmen during the twelfth week of the war. That German U-boats and perhaps aircraft are laying the mines which sank most of these ships, the German officials no longer deny. In spite of their arguments, these mines have been laid in violation of the Hague Convention of 1907 which states that (1) unanchored automatic contact mines must be so constructed that they become harmless within one hour after they are laid; (2) anchored automatic mines must be so constructed that they become harmless as soon as they break loose; (3) such mines must not be laid off enemy coasts for the sole purpose of intercepting commercial shipping; (4) "Every possible precaution must be taken for the security of peaceful shipping;" (5) such precaution includes notification of shipowners of the danger zones where mine fields are no longer under surveillance. Mines of German manufacture, some of which show no signs of moorings, have floated to British, Dutch, and Belgian shores and there have been explosions. Since Dutch, Japanese, Swedish, Lithuanian, Italian, Greek, and Yugoslavian vessels were among the ships sunk last week, one must conclude that the German navy makes no attempt to keep neutral shipping lanes open through the North Sea.

In retaliation Great Britain has declared subject to seizure as contraband all German goods on German or neutral ships regardless of destination. Contraband, as defined in international law, extends only to goods and materials of war destined, or presumed to be destined, to the enemy. Great Britain's proposed action also contravenes international law. Neither country has any right to accuse the other as wrongdoer. For war knows no law other than the jungle law of the survival of the fittest.

A nation at war must win. Whatever measures a government thinks will lead to the defeat of the enemy, it will enforce, whatever their abstract legal standing. To win is more vital than to obey the law. Thus it is, that as long as potential armed force is the determining factor in international politics, so long will expediency prevail over law. Outsiders cannot with justice condemn one belligerent without equally condemning the others.

World War II

By E. G. '41

All quiet on the Western Front,
So they report.
Let's get the battle going, boys;
War is such sport.

Only five planes went down today—
C'mon, you're slipping!
And are the timid Dutch afraid
About their shipping?

Will blackout practice go to waste?
It seems a pity.
And what about those nifty bombs
That smash a city?

It can't be that the people don't
Approve of war;
Of course they all must know that
"it"'s
Worth fighting for.

College Spirit

To the Wellesley College News:

As an enthusiastic and loyal Freshman, I am still boiling with righteous indignation at 1940's Free Press letter, published in your issue of November 9, about the lack of college spirit at Wellesley. Perhaps some of the censure was justified; most of my friends were shocked by the small attendance at the chapel service which marked the opening of the Service Fund drive. On the other hand, of all the many things which we have found to admire about Wellesley since we arrived on September 18, 1939, conversations prove that "the marvelous spirit here" takes first place by a long lead. It may be intangible, but so are most of the real and lasting values in life. Certainly this Wellesley spirit is real, for I don't know a single member of the class of '43 who doesn't feel as if she "belongs" to the college, heart, mind, and soul already.

As for the poor attendance at step-singing—well, what can you expect when virtually every student who loves to sing and possesses a good voice is over at Billings at a choir rehearsal? Instead of deploring the fact that girls who can hardly carry a tune don't come to step-singing, why not do something about this ridiculous conflict? If it were put to a vote, it is more than likely that the majority of choir members would prefer to start Tuesday evening rehearsals at 7:50 and stop at 9:15 rather than start at 7:20, end at 8:45, and miss step-singing.

So let's hear no more depressing complaints about the lack of spirit at Wellesley! I know that '43 is doing its part; I'm sure that the upperclassmen are not quite as hopeless as 1940 would have us believe. They look all right to us!

P.S. on Knitting

To the Wellesley College News:

May we add to the Free Press on Concert Knitters, published in the issue of November 16, that not only knitting, but the commotion caused by the putting on and taking off of coats during the programs should be eliminated? As a member of the Music Department explained to his class the other day, the loss due to the disturbance is not so much to the musicians as it is to the listeners themselves. Full attention is necessary if the audience expects really to enjoy and benefit from the program.

The true objection to knitting, and other such disturbances, lies in the fact that they are a substitution of something that is temporary, and consequently insignificant, for something that is of lasting value. The realization of this is important to the enjoyment not only of music, but of all the arts.

Caps and Frowns

The Princeton Way

College men flourished in all Wellesley classes over the week-end, but it took a Princeton man to conduct a Comp. class in a discussion of higher education. Beginning with a whispered comment to his date, the Princetonian soon accepted the invitation of the professor to present his views to the class. His lecture included a defense of the tutorial system, a description of Princeton's small classes, and a brief talk on the advantages of "browsing" courses open to Seniors. The class raised a little opposition to the arguments in glorification of Princeton, but the man carried the day. Now Wellesley Comp. students have found a second reason for visiting Princeton, and a purely academic one at that.

"Thanks" at Harvard

Tomorrow marks the last day to be celebrated at Harvard as Thanksgiving Day. By then, in order to please everyone, the college houses will have served two Thanksgiving dinners, one on the 23rd and one on the 30th. Add to please themselves, members of the Harvard Lampoon, the Lampuritans, have already held their own self-proclaimed Thanksgiving Day, celebrating by herding turkeys into Harvard Square. Leaving the turkeys to stop traffic, the members proclaimed the Lampoon a sovereign state and not a party to the perilous dispute between the President of the United States and the New England States.

Where There's a Mule—

"A man's best friend is his mule" is the theme song of a freshman at the University of Missouri. The freshman, with aspirations of becoming a veterinary surgeon, rode 330 miles to the university on his mule, Rosie. Arriving in time to register for the fall term, he discovered he had overlooked the problem of a tuition fee. Again Rosie was called upon to give her all for higher education. This time she was sold to cover academic expenses.

They Won't Say

Diplomacy is the thing at the University of Hawaii. The students are more than eager to debate the controversial issue: "Resolved, A woman's place is in the home." But none of the faculty are willing to judge the debate. Excuses from the male professors center around their wives who might not understand. But decision or no decision, the debating union is determined to thrash out the matter once and for all.

Modern Improvements

Some professors are always taking the fun out of life. The latest is the kill-joy at the University of Missouri who is removing the causes of complaint in foods, and thus, unintentionally no doubt, hindering table conversation. Already he has de-seeded a watermelon. College Years offers the suggestion that he try taking the squirts out of grapefruit.

Business and Pleasure

Some students at Little Rock Junior College in Arkansas have their own method of financing themselves in college. One of them discovered that there was no peanut butter plant in Arkansas, so the group established their own. The profits go toward their education. Now the students have not only a chance to go to college, but also a place to work when they have graduated.

THE PEREGRINATING PRESS

PROPOSED course to be added to the Wellesley required list: Elementary Arithmetic, stressing fractions. Perry reached this decision when he overheard a sophomore ask her companion how many tenths there were in a whole.

New books come out all the time, and some of Perry's friends have difficulty in keeping track of them. In Hathaway House the other day, one of them evidently had her media confused when she asked for Christ in Cement.

EVERY Freshman eventually realizes that she can stay away from the libe for only just so long. The other day Perry overheard one weebegone miss asking the librarian where the reserve books were kept.

This dual Thanksgiving is all very confusing, even in classes. Perry was amazed when a classmate raised her hand and announced seriously that she'd taken Miss X's man because Miss X went away for the week-end. "A good idea," returned the teacher. The man she meant, however, was the one on whom she was to give an oral report.

RATHER flustered was the village junior whom Perry saw walking down the meadow path after dark the other evening. A bicycle suddenly whipped past her at lightning speed, just brushing her skirt. In best "school marm" fashion she stated severely, "You'd better get off that bicycle and walk, young lady." "O. K., lady," was the reply in a deep masculine voice, "this is Western Union."

A friend of Perry's was worried because in a true or false quiz she had not known whether Mr. Passakivi was Turkey's foreign minister or not. "If it had only been written Pasha Kivi," she sighed, "I would have said he was Turkish."

READING the bulletin board, Perry was somewhat disturbed when he heard a Freshman beside him say, "Red Cross Roll Call." And then, "I wonder what they can ask us on that."

Perry was taken aback at the reassurance he heard one roommate giving another, who had mistakenly done the wrong assignment for her Economics class: "Oh, that's all right, pal. The professor will be glad to have one different!"

PESTERDAY a Senior walked out of a history class, disheartened by a flunked quiz she held in her hand. A sophomore, trying to cheer her up, came over to her and murmured, "Don't feel badly. Freshmen always have a hard time at first. You'll catch on after a while."

Poetess to Recite American Ballads

Miss Sarah Norcliffe Cleghorn, writer and teacher, will conduct the fourth in a series of annual Poet's Readings at 4:45 p. m. on Monday, December 11, in the Great Hall at Tower Court. Miss Cleghorn will recite selections from her published poems, emphasizing the American ballads for which she is famous.

Friend to such literary figures as Robert Frost and Mrs. Dorothy Canfield Fisher, Miss Cleghorn numbers not less among her friends many members of the Wellesley faculty and student body made during her short teaching term here in 1937-38. Well-known for such early books as A Turnpike Lady, The Spinster and *Portraits and Protest*s, Miss Cleghorn is also the author of a recently published, successful autobiography, Threescore.

Although Miss Cleghorn's reading will probably be the last of the winter term, it is hoped that in the spring Robert Frost will return to read selections from his own poetry and that Professor Chauncey Brewster Tinker of Yale University will find it possible to read from the poems of Matthew Arnold. Father Bonn will speak on Gerard Manley Hopkins. There will be no Alumnae poet this year.

Delegates Will Discuss International Problems At New England Meeting

Janet Howie '40, Luella La Mer '41, Martha Schwanke '40, and Miss Gwendolen Carter, Instructor in History and Political Science, will represent Wellesley at the New England Conference of International Relations Clubs, sponsored annually by the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, and held this year at New Haven State Teachers' College December 1 and 2.

Dr. Arnold Wolfers, Master of Pierson College at Yale University and Professor of International Relations, will discuss "The Prospects of a Durable Peace in Europe." Dr. Samuel Guy Inman, who gave a series of lectures here earlier this year at the conference on Latin America, will speak on "The American Continent Facing Europe." Dr. Inman has attended the Pan-American Conferences at Lima, Peru, and Buenos Aires, Argentina.

Student round table discussions will consider problems of Pan-Americanism, the European War and the Far East.

Dean Wilson Entertains Newly Elected Phi Betas

The Eta of Massachusetts Chapter of Phi Beta Kappa initiated its new members at the President's House, November 27. Those whose election was announced this fall are: Carolyn Elley, Marilyn Evans, Margaret Gilkey, Natalie Grow, Carol Lewis, Jeannette Lowe, Lucille Sheppard, Susan Swartz, Constance Tuttle, and Nancy Waite, all of the class of 1940.

Initiation followed dinner with Dean Wilson at Oakwoods. Miss Helen French, Professor of Chemistry, spoke on the evolution of research, and compared universities of his students.

Sra. de Palencia Seeks Peace In Proposed Intercontinental League

By Carol Lewis

"In the past, States have concerned themselves with national issues and national strife; now the problems of the world are international, and in the future they will be inter-continental," declared Senora Isabel Palencia, commenting on a future hope for world peace in an interview for the News. Ever optimistic, the former ambassador to Sweden spoke longingly of a new League of Nations, a universal League. She believes that at the close of the present war the nations will realize the importance of such a league, and will recreate it as an effective working organism.

"The League must be a parliament of all nations," Senora Palencia continued. "In it the nations must try to solve not only political problems, but economic problems as well, must make territorial adjustments and customs settlements." In the new League, it is possible that continents will discuss their own problems first at home, and then send delegates to rediscuss them in the parliament of nations. Before a plan like this can be effective, Senora Palencia believes that Asia and Africa will have to become completely independent, so that all continents can be equally represented.

The old League failed first of all, she asserted, because it lacked the support of the United States. The largest democracy in the western hemisphere will have to support a new League, if it is to be effective. The present tragic course of events in Europe would have been far different if the United States had been a member of the League. Senora Palencia feels that the influence of powerful undercover lobbies helped destroy the League of Nations. "There were always secret interests which worked against the League, because it tried, for example, to eliminate the opium and white slave trade," she declared. A new League, like the present Labor Organization, should leave room for representation not only of governments, but of powerful interests, trusts, and labor unions, in order that they may thrash their problems out openly, and not destroy the League in secret. The International Labor Organization, with which Senora Palencia was formerly connected, is an excellent example of the spirit in which a new League should be conducted. This organization allows not only the government, but labor and capitalist leaders as well, to speak and present their problems.

Through a thoroughly democratic and universal League, which will readjust boundaries and equalize economic resources through customs arrangements, the world can still look forward to that peace for which the nations hoped when the League was first founded. Senora Palencia believes that the peace following this war will be such that a new League will be possible.

Familiar with Sweden's particular problems, she feels that if the other nations would adopt and study Sweden's co-operative system, they would be internally ready for peace. Painting a picture of a northern fairyland where "everyone is happy," the former ambassador described the co-operative system in Sweden, a completely socialist, yet efficient, state, where wages are high, unions are strong, discipline is perfect, and the nationalized trains run on time. Strikes are not infrequent, but violence is rare. Unemployment is carefully planned for by the state. Yet the Swedish people are never satisfied, but are continually working toward further improvement. If nations all solve their domestic problems as Sweden has, they will be better fitted to work for world peace. Then they can join in a powerful, efficient League which will recognize the interdependence of world problems today, and endeavor wholeheartedly to find a peaceful solution.

Mr. Magoun Speaks On Brain Function

Professor F. Alexander Magoun of M. I. T. discussed "Mechanics of the Brain," November 24, at 4:40 p. m., in Alumnae Hall. The lecture was illustrated by movies taken in Russia, and edited by Professor Magoun to suit his purposes as he explained the working of the brain.

The movies, showing experiments by Pavlov and other leading scientists, began with behavior in animals, and proceeded to illustrate similar behavior in human beings. The pictures showed that animals and human beings in the working of the brain, are like similar machines, with that of human beings more complicated, but of the same general nature. Through diagrams and experiments, the nature of reflexes was shown, and unconditioned and conditioned reflexes explained.

The reactions of dogs and human beings to mechanical stimuli, such as the ticking of a metronome or a bell, serve to show how conditioned reflexes are built up. As an additional demonstration of conditioning, Professor Magoun presented a machine known as the "cogitating machine," made by one

Mary Hall Introduces System of Individual Dormitory Song Heads

In an attempt to organize the class more closely, Mary Hall, President of 1942, has appointed a sophomore song leader in each house. Besides the distribution of songs for the announcement of class officers, the duties of these leaders will include taking charge of serenading the Seniors at Christmas time and the directing of Senior robes for May Day. The girls will also keep the Sophomores in the various houses informed as to class business.

The leaders are: Tower, Jean Mullins; Clafin, Betty Blood; Severance, Marguerite Herman; Davis, Frances Duclos; Stone, Carolyn Nelson; Shafer, Mary Louise Barrett; Pomeroy, Nancy McLaughlin; Beebe, Rose Carroll; Cazenove, Barbara Beury; Munger, Lorna Cooke; Norumbega, Brereton Sturtevant. Sophomores are asked to cooperate with these leaders.

Undergraduates Frolic At All-College Dance

An eager throng of dancers alternately glided and "jitterbugged" across the ballroom floor in Alumnae Hall, Saturday evening, November 25, at the second all-college dance of the season.

Members of the Yale band, whose petition concerning the dance News printed last week, were in evidence during the early part of the evening, but had to leave before ten p. m. Rand Smith himself sang the vocal accompaniment of several of the tunes.

Campus Scenes Adorn New College Calendar

A "streamlined" cover in Wellesley blue and twelve photographs of typical campus scenes mark the Wellesley pictorial gift calendar for 1940. Three of the pictures, especially clear ones, were taken by Lucille Fessenden '40 during her college course in photography. They include "Wheels," which consists of a bike with the Green Tower in the background, a scene "On the College Golf Course," and a study of horses in October called "Riders Resting."

The calendar is now on sale at the El Table, The Well, and the Information Bureau.

Mr. Otis Rice Gives Third Marriage Talk

"Marriage is a test of the maturity we have achieved, especially in the field of human relationships," explained Mr. Otis Rice, speaking on "Psychological Preparation for Marriage," the third in the series of marriage lectures for Seniors, in Pendleton Hall, Monday afternoon, November 27 at 4:40 p. m.

Tracing the developmental process in the growth of human relations, Mr. Rice described the ever-broadening circle of adjustments to be made before a person reaches maturity. This psychological adjustment correlates with the biological growth and adjustment. Discussing the various "tactics" used before and during marriage, Mr. Rice particularly stressed the need for honesty. He explained this as including truth about oneself, what we are, and truth about how we feel.

Motion Picture Records Wellesley's Activities

A colored motion picture including the various seasons and activities at Wellesley College is well under way under the auspices of the Publicity Office. It will be for the use of the Alumnae Office, and the Office of Admissions, and will be especially valuable at teas held for prospective students.

Charles J. Carbonaro of New York City, who has taken a number of prizes for his work in photography, made the film. During four visits to the campus he has taken shots of many activities and of certain classroom scenes. His shots including the dissection of a lobster, a geology field trip at Nantasket Beach, students sipping sodas at The Well, and stepping-

ing. Production of the picture, which will probably be released in January, has been in process since last February.

Dr. C. Gilkey Speaks About Enlightenment

The war, and particularly the blackouts, were the subjects of Dr. Charles W. Gilkey's sermon in the Memorial Chapel on Sunday, November 27. As Dr. Gilkey has recently returned from a trip to Winchester last summer, he was well able to describe the strictness of regulations in England because of the war. After telling about a walk to a mailbox at night when he was reprimanded for turning on a tiny pocket flash, he explained his relief upon returning to the New York harbor. In former years people were glad to see the skyscrapers, but now the lights in the buildings were the sight they most appreciated.

Dr. Gilkey continued that we must not let our minds be closed and dark to the situation that is before us; we must live always with our eyes and our ears open.

Sra. de Palencia Tells Of Diplomatic Service

In describing her appointment as minister to Sweden during the Spanish Civil War, Senora Isabel de Palencia, at her lecture in Pendleton Hall, Friday evening, November 24, told of her life in Stockholm, of the presentation of credentials to the Swedish court of the Spanish legation, which was originally a palace; and of the typical day of a diplomat.

Senora de Palencia does not believe as some do that a diplomat is a "first-class spy." "Diplomacy must be a channel of peace and not war. It must be considered as a vocation like priesthood and medicine rather than as a career or a profession," she declared.

In closing her lecture, Senora de Palencia told what she considered were the advantages and disadvantages of women in diplomacy. Women, she said, have intuition and tact, and they are very thorough in their work.

Stage Technique Enters Classrooms at Buffalo

(ACP) Showmanship and the techniques of the theater are coming into their own in the educational system, at least they are at the University of Buffalo. It has invaded the economics classroom, where this university's professors are teaching the ins and outs of the economic system to freshmen by posing as financiers, legislators, salesman, or laymen in acting out the lessons of the day. With plots that are devised before class time, the professors enact typical scenes from the world of business, government and finance.

The advantages of this new kind of teaching procedure are summed up by one of the professors in these words: "This technique keeps the subject alive. Every three or four lines there is a change of voice and a change of pace. We aim for a balanced presentation. But even if the scholarly analysis were not incisive, the mere mechanics of the presentation would keep an audience awake."

C. G. Comment

The Grey Book does not state specifically where bicycles are to be parked. That fact seems obvious. The bicycle racks in Green parking space can hardly be overlooked. They were placed there instead of by the chapel or in the middle of the Pendleton green, because the parking space was built for the purpose of concentrating all vehicles at one place, instead of having them clutter the campus proper. No one would think of leaving an automobile in the middle of a lawn, but evidently a number of people do not hesitate to pile bicycles up on Pendleton grass, or beside the chapel. The effect is not less unattractive. The bicycle at best is hardly an object of beauty, and a whole collection of wheels and spokes is no addition to any greensward. There are just two reasons for anyone's so misusing the campus, ignorance of where the bicycle racks are located, and laziness. The former reason hardly holds after eight weeks of college, and as to the latter—C. G. wonders if there actually are people to whom the walk from the parking space to chapel is too trying on their strength. The chapel looks like a sort of railroad station in the morning with people dropping their bicycles on the grass just in time to catch the beginning hymn. A three-minute earlier start would give them time to park their bicycles properly, and enter the chapel both on time and on foot.

Miss Bowen Describes Lives of Rubinsteins

"Free Artist"—the Story of Anton and Nicholas Rubinstein. Catherine Drinker Bowen. Random House, 1939. 412 pages. $3.00

"Van II" is the nickname that Franz Liszt bestowed upon Anton Rubinstein in his youth, lovingly comparing him to Beethoven. In "Free Artist" Catherine Drinker Bowen shows that there was more than one point of comparison. Rubinstein's importance, however, lay not so much in his ability to compose, but in his creative "genius for interpretation, for sheer pianism," for a singing tone that had heretofore never been known to be produced except by the violin.

Miss Bowen's book is also a biography of Anton's brother Nicholas, unlike him in character, and yet as great an artist in his own way. Anton was always the professional artist, loving the concert stage and the laurels it brought him, while Nicholas preferred to play because it was in his nature to play, just as it was in his nature to become entrenched in the hearts of the people of Moscow. Together the brothers founded the Russian Musical Society, Anton in Petersburg, Nicholas in Moscow, at a time when Russia was just emerging from the stifling paternalism of Tsar Nicholas I.

The picture which Miss Bowen draws of the artists' mother is particularly moving. This strong, grave woman early instilled into the brothers their delight in hard work and perfection, and steadied them at the age when many Wunderkinder fail to become the great men their childhood predicted of them.

"Free Artist" is not only the story of two famous brothers, but also of an important era in Russian history. Miss Bowen's vivid style illumines all kinds of characters. One meets with familiarity and understanding such men as Tsar Nicholas I, Franz Liszt, and the sensitive, young Tchaikovsky. The general enlightenment and emancipation under Tsar Alexander II is admirably brought out and made to live in all its excitement. In telling of the emancipation of the slaves, Miss Bowen throws additional light on the spirit of freedom which allowed men like the Rubinstein brothers to dare call themselves "Free Artists," free from patronage, free to follow their own ideals and to bring to Russia the formerly little known greatness of Western music.

Not simply as the successor of Beloved Friend, but in its own right does "Free Artist" deserve to be read and appreciated.

Max Lerner to Speak At Ford Hall Forum

Mr. Max Lerner, Professor of Political Science at Williams College and formerly Editor of The Nation will consider "Democracy Is a Weapon" at Ford Hall Forum, December 3 at 7:45 p. m. at Ford Hall in Boston.

A graduate of Yale, Mr. Lerner studied at Yale Law School, but in the midst of his law course became interested in pressing social problems and applied himself to the study of economics and politics. He received a Ph. D. from the Brookings Graduate School of Economics and Government in 1927. He has written many books; his latest publication is The New Liberalism.

Art Museum Exhibits Works of Mme. Lesznai

The Wellesley College Art Museum will exhibit until December 18 the work of Madame Anna Lesznai, an artist who has been hailed abroad for the naivety, freshness and vitality of her work, and who is giving instruction to the sketch class during the first semester of this year.

The exhibition includes a large number of paintings in tempera, water-colors, gouaches, embroideries and designs, each of which speaks of the artist's profound love for her land and her people. Madame Lesznai's confessed aim in art is to recapture her childhood impressions of the Slovakian village in which she lived, and in reviewing this show we applaud her success.

For her subject matter Madame Lesznai chooses to represent animals, simple occupations of the people, village dances, feast days, market scenes and the landscape about her. The opaque, jewel-like colors of the tempera paintings define the forms which resolve into animated patterns of accumulative detail. The artist cares little for effects of perspective or precise anatomical rendering. Instead her interest is concentrated on the theme and the beauty it contains as if seen through the eyes of a child. The Hungarian Landscape in Spring emerges as a bright patchwork quilt, and Old Kitchen with its many hues and details becomes a delightfully unified composition.

Moreover Madame Lesznai is possessed of the ability to depict the universal, a quality which raises her paintings to the realm of the fine arts as contrasted with an essentially decorative art. Home Coming, a painting which represents workers returning from the fields at the time of day the artist loves best, well exemplifies her power of portraying a scene which appeals to every people in every land because of the universality of the emotions to which it gives rise.

The watercolors differ little in conception from the paintings in tempera. The Hen (illustrated), though not one of the paintings in which many details comprise the whole, is nevertheless typical of the artist's delight in homely things. Notice the childlike importance which the hen and her chicks take on in comparison to the surrounding landscape!

In observing the gouaches the influence of Pieter Breughel and Persian miniatures, which had already been detected in the tempera and watercolor, becomes fully marked. Innumerable small figures and amusing details combine to form a lively and colorful whole. Among the gouaches, rendered on different scales, Burning House is an extremely fine example.

One recognizes a skillful hand in Madame Lesznai's embroidery work, so finely executed that it can only be compared with tapestry work. The designs for the embroideries, book decoration, textiles, drawings, ceramics, etc., again reveal the artist's love for the simple fairy-tale life. The combination of a kind of Asiatic refinement with an advance modernism applied to old Hungarian themes lends to Madame Lesznai's work a charm and freshness which indeed should not be missed.

Orchestra to Play Unusual Music With Mr. Haroutunian as Soloist

By Joan Pinanski

The Wellesley College Orchestra will present some unusual instrumental music at their concert on December 6 in Alumnae Hall, in addition to furnishing accompaniments for two soloists, Miss Marion Gibby '41, violinist, and Professor Joseph Haroutunian, bass.

The concert will open with the overture to an opera entitled The Secret Marriage by Domenico Cimarosa. When this opera was performed for the first time in Vienna in 1792, the Austrian emperor was so pleased that he ordered supper to be served to all performers, and then told them to sing it all over again. Cimarosa has been called "the Italian Mozart" and had a special gift for light-hearted comedy. The overture is lively music which requires technical skill from string, woodwind, and brass players and a percussion section unusual in compositions performed by women's orchestras.

According to the score of Peter Warlock's Capriol Suite, which the orchestra will perform, it is based on dance tunes from Arbeau's "Orchesographie," composed in 1580. But to these simple old tunes Warlock has furnished a background of interesting modern harmony.

"Peter Warlock" is the penname musician who, under his own name, edited lute songs of the Elizabethans, and published some compositions of his own. Unsuccessful and discouraged, he resolved to start a new musical life, and changed his name. The music of Peter Warlock was more popular. Though he always united the highest ideals in art in his compositions, he had a cynical view of human life, and died despairingly, probably by his own hand, in 1930, at the age of 36.

Disgusted with the ignorant composers and unskillful performers of his day, Mozart wrote a composition entitled "A Musical Joke" which will be played at the concert. He shows in it complete lack of power to carry out any one idea, satirizing those musicians who could not "develop" their melodies. Closing cadences keep recurring, as if the composer could think of no more to say.

There is a ridiculous attempt at thematic elaboration in the finale, suggesting that the composer had heard of such a thing, and strove to imitate it in a few phrases, greatly to his own satisfaction. Sometimes nothing but accompaniment is heard for many bars, until the audience begins to wonder if the solo instruments have forgotten to "come in."

Recital to Prove Verse Club Skill

The newly organized Verse Speaking Club, directed by Miss Cecile deBanke, will present its first program of the year, a special Christmas recital, Sunday, December 3, at the Woman's City Club in Boston.

The program will consist of two parts; first a group of selections illustrating imitative sounds, and second, Christmas poems. The first group includes The Main Deep, by Stephens; The Drop of Water, by March; Mrs. Reece Laughs, by Armstrong; and Music Comes, by Freeman. In the second group the Club will present the nativity story from the second chapter of St. Luke, I Saw Three Ships, Dark the Night, The House of Christ- mas, Song of the Crib, Sing in Excelsis Gloria, and other Christmas numbers.

Mary B. Turner '40 is President of the Club. The other members are: Katharine Buchanan '40, Mary Phil Taylor '40, Elizabeth Darlington '40, Selma Leventhal '40, Helen Wentworth '40, Barbara Cohen '40, Barbara Oliver '40, Muriel Terry '40, Frances Man '40, Theodora Kerl '41, Helen Ross '41, Virginia Henke '41, Ann Tattman '41, and Shirley Andrews '41.

Busch and Serkin Join In Impressive Concert

Adolf Busch, violinist, and Rudolf Serkin, pianist presented the second of the Wellesley Concerts Thursday evening at Alumnae Hall. Each was a superb artist in his own field; together they were magnificent. They seemed to have been motivated by the same feelings, for the music was from one mold, the result of two personalities merged into one.

The Sonata in C Minor written by Beethoven in his middle period opened the program. Fiery and difficult, the allegro movement demonstrated immediately the perfection of their ensemble playing, but it was the second movement with its broad sweeping theme in the violin which was outstanding. The delicate arpeggio passages, played first by the piano and then the violin, was always distinct; the contrast between rushing notes in the piano and sustained notes in the violin was always effective. The precision in the entrance of both instruments, remarkable.

The Brahms' Third Sonata in D Minor showed the influence of Hungarian tunes and ideas, and was typical of Brahms at his best. Passages with two notes against three came off smoothly because of the composer's skillful composition and the musicians' finished performance. Again we must mention the ensemble work, the unified expression which Busch and Serkin achieved throughout the number.

The compositions played by each man alone added greatly to the interest of the program. Mr. Busch's execution of the Bach Partita in E Major demonstrated the effectiveness of "minimum bowing for maximum expression." The single-line prelude which resembled a whirlwind revealed a technical virtuosity that left us amazed. Mr. Serkin showed equal virtuosity in his two numbers; both could have been merely fireworks; instead, the performance was distinguished by restraint added to power and expression. The entire concert was one of the most distinguished heard at Wellesley in many years.

Miss Chase to Speak On Writing of Novel

Mary Ellen Chase, well-known writer, will speak on "The Reading and Writing of a Novel" at John Hancock Hall, Boston, Friday, December 1, at 8:30 p. m. Miss Chase appears as the third speaker in a series of Three Literary Evenings under the auspices of the Boston Smith College Club, to whose scholarship fund the money from the tickets will contribute.

Miss Chase's books reveal much of her own life. In The Goodly Heritage she tells of her childhood in Maine, where she was born in 1887, one of eight children. In A Goodly Fellowship, Miss Chase's newly published autobiography, she relates the many interesting events in her life of teaching in American schools and universities. She graduated from the University of Maine after completing four years' work in three. Since 1926 Miss Chase has been professor of English at Smith College.

Pictorial Review magazine awarded a $2500 prize to Miss Chase in 1931 for her short story Salesmanship. Her fame is due mostly to her novels, among which are Mary Peters, Silas Crockett, and Dawn in Lyonsse. This England is perhaps her most celebrated work.

Old Cookbooks Reveal Eating Popular Sport

boil. After that, say the directions, "do with it as with other pippin paste." Oh, of course, you know how it is with pippins!

Another book on preserves, published in 1683, and called A Queen's Delight, Or the Art of Preserving, Conserving, and Candyng, besides giving recipes, also tells of the "vertues" of the different foods. A conserve of majoram, for instance, is "good against the coldness, the moisture of the brain, the stomach, and it strengtheneth the Vital Spirits."

In spite of some slight difference in taste, however, it seems that people always got hungry and wanted something to eat, whether it be a chocolate fudge sundae from the drugstore, or a "pompelone of pigeons and larks" out of a 1720 cookbook. In fact, the wise author of A Treatise on Food observes that "young people, and those of an hot and bilious constitution . . . do oftener than others perceive the need they have of victuals." Victuals is right! Does anybody want to go to The Well?

'43 Officers Reveal Differing Interests

Sally Moore, Freshman Member of Court, was entertaining when your reporter arrived. Holding aloft Charlie, a little monkey with "pads over his eyes," she was demonstrating how his arms and legs can be quite expressive, when fingers have been inserted into them. When her hand isn't filling the space inside Charlie's chest, Sally keeps it stuffed with tissue paper, "for appearances."

Because her father is a Navy man, Sally has seen several ports. Before coming to New London, Connecticut, where she is living for the present, she lived in Virginia five years. Her mother is a native of New York, and consequently the family has spent several years there.

When some of the fleet was ordered to Europe for a short trip in 1928, Sally went along. In her wanderings, she has also explored the South Pacific, living two years in the Samoan Islands, and stopping at Pearl Harbor in Honolulu, en route. She was born in Berkeley, California, and lived there until she was four. "And somehow," she reflected, "I can't seem to remember much about that—"
