BARONESS VON SUTTNER’S LECTURE.

Baroness Bertha von Suttner is one of the most distinguished figures in the present movement for universal peace. She is the president of the Austrian Peace Society, and it was she who influenced Alfred Nobel to institute the Nobel Peace Prizes. Her book, “Lay Down Your Arms,” has been called the “Uncle Tom’s Cabin” of the peace movement.

The members of the college had the pleasure of hearing Baroness von Suttner, Monday evening, October 7, in College Hall Chapel. The Baroness said that she had become interested in the peace problem through her study of English history. In it she saw the progress of peace, and so dedicated all of her powers to aid in the attainment of universal peace. The Baroness spoke of the Hague Conference of 1899 as one of the rocks on which we may build. The representatives of the twenty-six states who met there established a court of arbitration which has given judgments that averted war. The United States has shown great interest. The date of the Hague Conference, May 8, is celebrated in some schools as a holiday, and our Presidents, Taft and Roosevelt, have both championed the cause. Baroness von Suttner believes that women will soon influence the political situation. Then politics will become peaceful, for women would never spend seventy per cent. of the federal income for past and future wars. With the money we spend on war, all our modern economic problems might be solved. The Baroness culminated her speech with an appeal to American youth to learn universal brotherhood of the world. She believes that peace must inevitably come, for the same law that unifies the universe regulates human progress, and the nations must finally be brought to peace and concord.

MONDAY CLASSES.

(Note.—The article below is the opinion solicited from a member of the Junior Class,—a tentative expression of undergraduate opinion on the six day schedule.—Editor.)

It may seem a little early to express an opinion about the new schedule, since in the rush of the opening weeks we have had little chance to put our work into running order. But we may venture to say a few things even so.

There are some girls, who, under the new schedule, as under the old, have a fairly easy programme, and some girls who have a fairly heavy one, some who find that they have a good deal of free time, some who have practically none. For the latter, the week is apt to seem a merciless succession of appointments separated only by time filled with preparation, and Saturday afternoon finds them rather tired out.

Still, the schedule must be judged by the average programme, which in many cases, is very well arranged. Be it said, that it is presumed that we are here primarily because we find an unparalleled opportunity to learn the things we are eager for, not for the largest possible amount of time for play. Therefore, if the schedule is so arranged that we can do our work more regularly, more steadily, and in a more scholarly way, we surely ought not to grumble because our “free time” comes at intervals and not all at once.

With the new order of things, it is fairly difficult to keep to our habit of letting work pile up and then flying at it frantically in an attempt to make up for time spent in play. Our schedules now demand regular study, every day, and what could be better for our habits? Surely in this way we get the maximum of good from our classes, learn to work more wisely, and still find time for play in the end. It seems as if we must very soon be won away from our antagonism to the six-day schedule and come to support it heartily.

MAIDS’ SOCIAL.

On Monday evening, October 7, the Extension Committee of the Christian Association held a social at the Barn for the college maids. A vaudeville show of several acts was given, after which refreshments were served. The entertainment ended in dancing. The evening was planned by Emily Walker, 1914, chairman of the Extension Committee, and by Marion Mulford, 1914.)
WELLESLEY COLLEGE ARTIST RECITALS.

1912-1913.

The Music Department announces three subscription Artist Recitals to be given in College Hall Chapel.

Monday, November 18, 1912, 7.30, P.M.

Tina Lerner, the Russian pianist, came to the United States unheralded only a few years ago; since then through her genius as a player and her charming personality, she has become known all over Europe as one of the first players of the day.

Monday, February 3, 1913, 7.30, P.M.

Miss Maggie Teyte, as the Soprano of the Chicago Grand Opera Company and as an extremely successful concert singer, is well known to the operatic public in the United States; she has also sung with great success in Covent Garden. Those who were here last season will remember the song-recital by Carmen Melis of the Boston Grand Opera Company; it is expected that Miss Teyte, whose appearances everywhere are awaited with much eagerness, will command an even greater success here.

Monday, March 3, 1913, 7.30, P.M.

The Flonzaley, first among all String Quartettes, give an absolutely finished performance of their programme. This will be their second appearance at Wellesley College. Reserved seats, course tickets, $3.50 each; admission seats, course tickets, $1.75 each.

Orders may be sent through United States or Resident Mail to Miss Hetty S. Wheeler, Room C, Billings Hall, or handed to her there.

MEETING OF THE PHILOSOPHY CLUB.

The annual meeting of the Philosophy Club was held in the Faculty parlor on Monday evening, October 7. The following officers were elected for the year 1912-1913:

President, Florence Brotherton, 1913.
Secretary-Treasurer, Eugenia Corwin, 1914.

Miss Calkins then introduced the speakers of the evening, Dr. Lowenberg, of Harvard and Wellesley, and Miss Gamble. Dr. Lowenberg talked briefly of the life and philosophy of Rudolf Eucken, emphasizing Eucken’s ideal of an intimate relation between philosophy and life. Dr. Eucken is now Exchange Professor at Harvard, and the Philosophy Club is to have the privilege of hearing him at Wellesley at an early date in October. Miss Gamble then spoke on "the choice of stimulus words in experiment work with chance word-reaction," with particular reference to the experiments which she has recently been conducting.

The meeting was followed by an informal reception.

FRESHMAN SERENADE.

Last Saturday evening, October 12, the class of 1916, according to the fall fashion, turned out in a body to serenade the Sophomores. At 7.15 P.M., the class assembled at the Naomett, all clad in white. They wore green sashes in token of their Freshmanship, and also wore their hair down their backs tied with green hair-ribbons. Each girl carried a green Japanese lantern, bobbing over her shoulder, so that as the long procession, each line formed of ten girls abreast, wound up through the campus, the effect was of a grove of soft green lights.

The serenaders first came to a halt at the Quadrangle, then proceeded to the Hill, then to College Hall, then to Stone Hall, and finally to the village. A great deal of praise is due to Helen Kennedy, who, with the aid of her six cheer leaders, helped to make the serenade such a success.

Director, 1913: Marie Collins.
Director, 1914: Eugenia Corwin.
A recent query in an education course, “What reform program would you instigate in Wellesley College, had you the power?” brought out many interesting points of view. All kinds of reforms were suggested, some good, some not so good, but all valuable as frank opinions of persons who had every reason to know whereof they spoke, in part, at any rate. Some asked for more freedom in election of courses, some wishing more concentration, some less; some asked for more modern treatment of contemporary life and affairs; several made a plea for more personal contact between student and instructor. But, the greatest number, — about twenty-five per cent. of a division of a hundred and twenty, — desired the institution of more utilitarian courses. The majority of these last wanted domestic science training, though quite a number spoke of secretarial work, stenography, typewriting, etc.

Of course the arguments used for these utilitarian courses were good. They were the same ones that are being constantly advanced by most people who do not approve of sending a girl to college. “Education to which the time of a college course is given, should prepare one more tangibly and usefully for life,” they say. It seems too bad that this is the feeling even of some college students, themselves.

Doesn’t it seem forcing matters a little rapidly not to be willing to give time to the theory of things; to learning the traditions of the past; to acquiring the “wisdom of the ages,” so to speak. Four years is a comparatively short time taken from the long life we have to live. We shall have years and years to practise, years in which we can apply our knowledge. How much better it seems to gain a working basis from the experience of great minds, rather than trust to working out our own ill-formed principles based upon our narrow observations.

The almost scornful attitude toward the “dead languages,” history, as an account of people who are “dead and gone,” etc., is really an unworthy one. It merely shows an insufficient acquaintance with the above-mentioned languages. A knowledge of them clearly shows them not dead at all, but living and glowing with beauty and joy in a life where the science of the ideal was accounted no mean pursuit in any one’s eyes. As to history — it seems hardly necessary to stress the importance of exploring the great fund of human experience before we try to go forward by ourselves, to profit in our course by past mistakes and successes.

We do not for a minute undervalue the study of more utilitarian courses, particularly domestic science. Our plea, however, is against the dissatisfaction with more theoretical courses. It has so far been impossible to teach domestic science here, probably because the installation of the system would mean such a great expense, probably because of reasons best known to those in authority. If we cannot have both the so-called “cultural” and "utilitarian" courses, let us not be so foolish as to value the latter before the former. We have been given every cultural opportunity, it would seem, and we must not lose sight of the greatness of our privileges.

In the rush and hurry of college life we are too apt to lose our perspective, our rational view of things. After all, we at the age of twenty, in the middle of a college course, are not very well fitted to judge how successfully our training is going to prove. Let us be more than content if it gives us what Mr. Thorndike calls culture—"the training for the impersonal pleasures—the unselfish satisfactions which involve no necessary deprivation for any other man. We need some term to include these equitable, stainless wants—appreciation of beauty in nature and art, the observer’s interest in human life; the sense of humor, knowledge, joy in getting and giving it and the rest—which increase was seen to be one main element of the aim of education." *Thorndike, E. L.—Education.

To my mind the anti-suffragist party has been in more or less a comatose condition for some time. The meetings of the Suffrage League are not crowded. It is not probable or possible that the entire student body has gone over to the side of suffrage. What is more likely, is that most of us are too busy to be vitally interested in this great issue.

As college women we should have at least an intelligent view of the subject. Let us know where we stand! Let us not continue in this indifferent attitude!

Many of us are anti-suffragists. But a large majority of this party are of this opinion, for little other reason than that such a stand is more likely to be unchallenged. That cannot be wise or worthy when there are so many excellent grounds for anti-suffrage.

To quote the clipping below from the "Boston Record," giving the words of the late Mrs. Kate Gannett Wells, one of the great leaders of the anti-suffrage movement, is to state the case better than our own words could do it. Read it and be convinced and ready to take a stand.

Mrs. Wells declared: "My reasoned convictions against the expediency of woman suffrage have strengthened rather than lessened as years have gone by. Both pro and anti-suffragists are working alike for human freedom and growth, and in so far each honors the other. It becomes then a question of method between us, symbolized by suffrage. For and against that method we both work with our fullest strength.

"As a method I believe suffrage is unwise; for women can work more disinterestedly in both public and private positions if they are not affiliated by votes with one or another party. They are independent then and how free and true and broad their work can thus be they well know.

"It is thus for the sake of the whole country that we plead that suffrage may not become an impediment to woman. Our country needs that one-half of its people at least should be free from the restrictions of political organizations and ready to work for home, school, and state as women, and not as partisans."

Isn’t it joyful to escape from the library and skip care-free down the concrete walk past Longfellow Pond? But isn’t it unfortunate that our joy has to be expressed by whistling and loud visiting? Remember that there are others still within the library, others whose mental struggles not yet over, are only made more painful by our thoughtlessness!

206 COLLEGE HALL
CAMPUS NOTES.

A new Maids' Dormitory is now in process of construction. It is in the rear of College Hall beyond the kitchen and express entrances. It is to be a model building, equipped with all the conveniences, and connected with College Hall by means of an underground passageway. It will accommodate about fifty, and will make it unnecessary for any of the College Hall maids to live at the Barn.

A new boat livery is being built by Mr. A. D. Monoghan along the lake shore near the other boat houses. The building will be on the same general plan as the boat houses, and will contain a repair shop in the upper floor and boats for rent to the college girls and their friends, in the first storey. It is hoped that it will be completed and in operation by spring.

The Agora is building a new addition to its society house on the north side toward College Hall. It will contain a dining-room on the first floor, connected with the living-room and hallway, and will mean the enlargement of the kitchen and dressing room in the basement.

Wellesley College was invited to send two delegates to the seventy-fifth anniversary celebration at Mount Holyoke College. President Pendleton and Professor Locke of the Bible Department attended as college representatives. Representatives from colleges all over the country attended the exercises, which lasted from Tuesday morning till Thursday evening.

The Alumnae Reception was held Tuesday morning, and a pageant in which the undergraduates took part, occupied the afternoon. The day ended with a concert by Madame Homer.

Wednesday morning there was a procession, including representatives from every class from 1848 down to 1912. After the procession was over, the Field Memorial Gateway was formally opened and presented to the college. Speeches were made by several college presidents, including Miss Pendleton.

The events of Wednesday afternoon, however, hold the greatest interest for Wellesley people, for it was then that President Pendleton received the honorary degree of L.L.D.

The sincere congratulations of the whole college are hers, we are sure.

NEW REPORTING SYSTEM.

Under the present college reporter, Mrs. Magee, a new system of newspaper reporting, modelled on the system at Smith and Vassar, has been instituted. A certain number of authorized reporters, each representing a different Boston or New York paper, “pool” Wellesley news each noon and then send it out to the different papers. The practical import of this system to members of the college at large is that a student may know, if one of these reporters approaches her for a photograph or information, that this reporter is authorized, under the present system, to obtain and give out said material. Of course, aside from these reporters, students are forbidden, under Student Government rules, to give out information concerning Wellesley to any newspaper.

PARLIAMENT OF FOOLS.

MY F. P.

I have a little fountain pen that travels round with me,
Its uses in my classes are very plain to see;
But the way it acts up sometimes makes me very sadly fear
It has not the proper spirit toward the Academic here.

For whenever I start working hard, that pen as sure starts in
And leaks and splutters o'er my clothes as soon as I begin.
I wouldn't mind it on my hands, I'd use Sapolio,
But it doesn't help my dresses, or my precious folio.

The pen of Genius swiftly writes, the moving hand moves on,
The notes that come from 136 C. H. are neatly done,
But I'd rather learn sign-language, or never write—just speak—
Than have to use a Fountain Pen, and have it leak and leak.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON.

Run! Run! Run!
It's the 1:03 train for mine!
In breathless haste I wonder
If a seat I'm going to find.

1915.

How dear to our hearts seem the scenes of our childhood,
As down toward the Square we now walk the streets through.
What mem'ries of meetings, of fine fudge-cake treatings,
In training-less days with the Inn right in view.

But think of the bunches
Of note-books and lunches,
And how our arms ached, and our fingers grew chill.
And oh! those hard sidewalks,
Those blistering sidewalks,
Those endless, red sidewalks that led to the Vill.

OBITUARY.

Many members of the College, former and present, lose from sight a beloved friend of Wellesley days in the death of Mrs. Elizabeth H. S. Jones, the mother of Dr. Barker, and long a resident of the Eliot. The end came peacefully on August 6, in East Aurora, New York, where Mrs. Jones and Dr. Barker have lived since they left Wellesley. The life of Mrs. Jones has been full of efficient, and even distinguished service, for soldiers in the Civil War, for the children of soldiers after the war closed, and in homes for homeless girls, one at least of which she herself founded. In all, Mrs. Jones spent about forty-two years in organized educational and philanthropic work, and her years of retirement were those of beautiful and stimulating influence and perennial youth. A few months before her death, Mrs. Jones, as a real daughter of a Revolutionary soldier, was made an honorary member of the Buffalo Chapter of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

DEATHS.
