DEATH OF DR. SAMUEL B. CAPEN.

A cable dispatch from Shang-hai, China, brings the sad tidings of the death of Dr. Samuel B. Capen, president of the Board of Trustees. Dr. Capen was taken ill with pneumonia on January 26 and removed to a hospital on the 28th. His death occurred on the 29th. The despatch states that he had every possible care, and that Mrs. and Miss Capen are themselves free from illness.

MISSIONARY VESPERS.

Dr. Brown, for forty years on the Board of Missions at Harpoot, Turkey, delivered the address at the Sunday vespers service on February 1. He said that he felt himself particularly fortunate to be a worker in Christ's own land. The Turk, he said, was a mere passing event in the history of that old cradle of great civilizations. It was the land of the Hitities, of the Trojans and the Amazons, of Caesar and Alexander. To-day its inhabitants are the remnant of those great nations, from the robber Arabs and devil-worshippers of the South, to the sturdy Kurds of the Tigris country, and the Jews and Greeks of the North. For the most part their family life and their agricultural methods have not changed in two thousand years.

The only power which can weld together this strange polyglot of nations is the power of the gospel of Christ. Bound as they are by centuries of custom and rooted to their old religions, it is difficult to reach them. But what can be done and Christ's truth finds a chance to work it has accomplished marvels. No man or woman is so debased that the message of Christ cannot transform him. Sometimes the missionaries have seen their efforts rewarded by the conversion of whole communities and villages.

From the wealth of his personal experience Dr. Brown related several incidents which witnessed the superb loyalty of the missions of America to their missionary enterprise. He cited a number of men who, during the Armenian massacres, cooledly faced death rather than renounce their faith in the Christian God. Tales such as these that the missionaries bring us are what make us wonder if we favored Christian people are not lukewarm in our convictions and half-hearted in our faith.

VOCA TIONAL GUIDANCE.

An open conference of general interest will be held on Tuesday, February 10, at 4:20 P.M., in College Hall Chapel. There will be a general discussion of vocational openings for women, by representatives of the New York and Philadelphia Bureaus of Occupations, and a talk on opportunities for social service in connection with the rural schools of Vermont, by Mrs. Harriet Baxter Ide, of Wellesley, 97. The Philadelphia Bureau will be represented by Miss Marion Reily, Dean of Bryn Mawr, and the New York Bureau by Miss Mary S. Snow, Research Secretary of the New York Intercollegiate Bureau of Occupations.

The following information has reached the Appointment Bureau from the director of the New York State Library at Albany, New York:

The following public libraries maintain formal and efficient apprentice training:

Brooklyn Public Library, Springfield Public Library, Los Angeles Public Library, Chicago Public Library, St. Louis Public Library, Seattle Public Library, Atlanta Public Library, Washington D. C., Public Library, New York Public Library.
We have a Spartan desire to be kicked if necessary, but has this imp a right to do it? If his plan were carried out, many of us would wake up in the streets of Wellesley. Would the College be justified in disrupting obedience in order to preserve the integrity and high quality of its methods? In other words, remembering the increasingly great demands of the country for real scholastic work, is it better that a number of people should get a somewhat diluted draught of learning than that a smaller number should be made to take it straight? We do not pretend to know yet, but will you not help us to solve the question?

Our imp has been listening all along to this query, and now puts his head in for a final word. "If they decide not to flunk you," he says, "at least don't forget that you deserve it!"

COMMUNITY LIFE.

The college girl has a way of letting those two words, "community life," slip easily off her tongue as an answer to all questions and a shield against all criticism concerning certain free-and-easy tendencies of girls in dormitories. She says it when she divides her provender bill with the seven or eight people who have charged and maintained in her name; it is an equally good charm to ward off evil spirits when her friends break her best china or she uses up someone else's commutation ticket. We do not know who has heard the same message before. "Community" sounds trivial enough as it comes tripping off a practiced tongue but, after all, "community spirit," as we are pleased to eulogize it, is a more important characteristic of contemporary life than it is generally given credit for. The simple things that it does are slight enough—small laws written and unwritten decreeing that one may not cry for the moon when there is bread, or attempt to study for examinations, or that one may not sigh for peace; quiet when the ninety and nine are minded to hold up high jubilee; decreeing that food may be demanded indiscriminately in time of stress, decreeing that every girl shall recognize her share in the common responsibilities, putting down rugs, serving at lunch and the like. Little things, you say, but they are the very foundation of college life. Where else could a thirty or fifty or even fifty women sleep in close proximity and eat three times a day in one room, experience together the ups and downs of life with as little friction and as much camaraderie as we have in a college dormitory? Where else could a girl of widely different tastes and temperaments enjoy close intimacy for three years, settling all questions of action by the simple principle of "two to one" and yet respecting certain rights of individual choice, opinion and conduct? "The rights of private property" we call them.

The strange paradox of this Sittenholt of college is that while some matters are admittedly common and the right of the individual is nil, in other matters the individual is nearly as important as in the feminine movement. The non-gregarious girl who scarcely realizes that she lives in a community, is, in all probability, ignored; but the girl who fails to recognize personal rights is anathema. Such is the girl who presumes on the cordiality of an informal acquaintance to demand intimate friendship, who butters on the doors you lock upon your private meditations, who spends industrious hours with the corkscrew trying to discover the exact nature of your religious belief or your "philosophy of life" in order that she may tell you how much more advanced her own are, who tells you what time you ought to go to bed and volunteers advice on hanging your pictures, who adopts your mannerisms and borrows your private nickname for your best friend. We all know her and thank heaven that no law, written or unwritten, demands that we accept her gracelessly. It is not for the good of the community that one who knows not the difference between mine and thine be in our midst, and the offender against the rights of personal property finds herself suddenly not wanted. The community demands self-defense. Woman must be able to distinguish between common and private, and respect the distinction. One more demand is sometimes heard and should be always. This is that the offender be told where in her offense lies, and be given a chance to redeem herself. No just code condemns a man on secret accusation, and then executes him in silence. The cruelty of silence is harder to bear than the cruelty of the open wound. The primary demand in self-defense, as in life, is the recognition of each individual. Who are we, after all, but an assembly of other persons, once like ours of one who is Taboo, she knows not why, is not good. Better have one who understands what offense she has committed, and will make up her mind to mend it. The thing that the offender be told where in her offense lies, and is given a chance to redeem herself. No just code condemns a man on secret accusation, and then executes him in silence. The cruelty of silence is harder to bear than the cruelty of the open wound. The primary demand in self-defense, as in life, is the recognition of each individual. MEMORIAL

At a meeting of the Yorkville District Committee of the Charity Organization Society in the City of Yorkville, on Thursday, January 23rd, 1914, the following Minute was adopted:

Isabel Dillingham died on Sunday, January 18th, 1914, after a brief illness contracted on her round of arduous duty. She fell a soldier on the field of battle.

A graduate of Wellesley College, in the Class of 1912, she came to New York in the autumn of that year. In the School of Philanthropy she was one of the ablest students—sage, sincere, reliable. After four months she was recommended, unqualifiedly, for the position of assistant secretary of the Yorkville District, and served for a brief year. By her intelligent approach to all problems, her constructive power, and her devotion to her work, she fulfilled the great hopes of her.

It is with a great sense of sorrow that this Committee records its loss.

Resolved: That a copy of this Minute be spread upon the records and copies sent to her family, to the secretary of her college class and to Wellesley College.

A NEW "OCCUPATION OTHER THAN TEACHING."

Dear College News:

Have you seen the article in the December Bookman on "Pots in Postage Stamps"? It is a clever article and well worth reading. But it is something more than worth reading; it is suggestive. I often wonder why Seniors who are looking for "jobs" do not investigate the business of buying and selling postage stamps to collectors. "Abroad," you say. "Little boys collect stamps and they never buy them, they swap." Dear College News, you are quite wrong. The collectors who are middle-aged and pay from twenty-five cents to a dollar for a single stamp are quite as numerous as the boy collectors.

In these days of feminism when women can do everything that men can do and do it better, it is risking something to say that stamp collecting and stamp selling is a business for which women are especially adapted. But I am going to suggest, although very timidly, that woman's nicety of manipulation, her carefulness in detail, her fineness of perception and feeling make her especially fitted to handle these beautiful, delicate, and interesting bits of paper. I do not know how much capital the business takes, but since it is fundamentally a mail-order business it can be carried on in any town large enough to have a post-office; it needs no office or salesroom. A stock of a thousand dollars will go easily in a small hand-bag.

Did you know that a recent Wellesley graduate, Mrs. I. W. Kellogg, '01, West Hartford, Connecticut, is a successful stamp dealer? Yours,

H. C. MacDougall.

INSIDE THE GARDEN WALL.

I am convinced at times that college is too much with us. Late and soon, we are getting things of wholly academic interest. We are spending our time and strength in work and play which never takes our thoughts beyond the engaging life of college. There are very many of us to whom this life is vivid and fascinating enough. We find in our friends unceasing interest, and through them, stimulation to do our best. We continually have "adventures in friendship" in which we have the opportunity to prove to ourselves the quality of our friendliness. But the very vividness and fascination of such experiences blinds us to everything else. We forget that as near as in the city of Boston there are thousands of men and women who work in offices and shops from morning till night. We forget that a girl may go shopping with her mother and do errands for her father; that young women may work hard to have a petition for equal suffrage presented to the legislature. We are happily ignorant of the fact that we have any American artists and that we might find anything of interest in an exhibition of their paintings. We do mightily our little best within our garden wall, but we are largely content to remain inside it. We may not have many chances to go outside and see our garden in perspective, in its proper relation to the whole world; but we ought to take any opportunity that does come to us. We ought also, each one of us, to keep this total vision daily in mind, so that the wall may not shut us up entirely in our academic interests, however vital they may be.

BERENICE K. VAN SLYEKE, 1913.

COPIES.

Perhaps the writers of papers and themes do not recognize the full importance of thoroughly going over their manuscripts before giving them to girls to be copied. Do we all realize that when a girl is given a paper to be copied, it is neither her duty, her privilege, or her moral obligation to correct faulty punctuation, grammatical errors, or poor spelling; neither should she add any essential or minor parts, which may be lacking, to outlines, bibliographies and footnotes. If a girl does correct such errors or fill in careless omissions, should she not in all fairness to the instructor, to the writer of the paper, and to herself, note her share of the work on that paper? Suppose we consider the case from another angle. Is a girl justified in giving a hastily written paper to another girl to be copied? Careless errors may be easily detected in a second reading of the paper. A help for doubtful places may be found in any good English grammar, or in a dictionary. Murray's New English Dictionary is excellent. A printed form for bibliographies may be obtained from any Freshman or instructor in English Composition. If these Helps are resorted to and papers gone over in a scholarly way, there will be no need of notes. Please let us remember that our papers are to be copied as they are and not as they should be.

in the quality of entertainments they offer to a critical audience, and a critical audience it is. Don't think you who are chosen entertainers, that because an audience is Irish or Syrian or Italian that it is any the less critical. Intellectual powers are perhaps dormant, and our Syrian neighbors could not resolve a performance, by any brilliant analytical process, into its component parts of good and poor, but—they do "know a good show when they see one." What's the matter with a short sketch that you don't give one? What's the matter with a good quartette, singing a good share of funny songs, that you don't provide one? Don't forget these three things:

A. That you can't entertain successfully without preparation.
B. That Harvard and Radcliffe and professionals are your rivals.
C. That your audience is critical not only because it is human nature to be so, but because they have been waiting a long time for your entertainment, and also because they have been used to a higher standard than you are now giving them.

A MIDYEAR MONOLOGUE.

Friends, I bespeak your attention. In the favor of this hectic existence, I beseech you to stop and consider. Whether are we drifting? What means this tempest in a wash-bowl? I walk about the College corridors and what do I hear? Calm and collected (?) Seniors sobbingly soothing poor epithelializing spirit in believing that the Judgement Day has dawned—which, to all intents and purposes, has.

But what of it? Did we not come to College prepared to meet our intellectual doom, and do we not firmly believe that only such a calamity as is now upon us can purgge college life of its unscholastic propensities? Yet you cringe at the sight of a few printed questions. Alas, my fellow sufferers, think of the Spanish Inquisition! Think of the martyrs who went willingly to their doom without batting an eyelash. Does not the comparison appeal to you?

Every one of you is a martyr, in this modern inquisition. These other martyrs went to their destruction with smiling faces, borne up by faith. Where is your faith? They were as unprepared for their fate as are many of you.

The trouble is in the point of view. This modern generation is too much concerned with results. The thought of a “grade” is more potent with us than the consideration of the branding iron could have been with the martyrs of the Inquisition. But I prophecy a new cult and its creed is as consoiling as it is original. Listen! Martyrs are no criterion of either effort or attainment. They are arbitrary evaluations of mechanical labor and purposeless endeavor. A’s are demoralizing flat-tetes and C’s are confessions of incompetence on the part of dilatory professors.

You came seeking bread and you receive—marks! And because you have passed through all the stages of intellectual excitement incident to receiving these worthless insignias, you say that college is “broadening.” It has brought out all your latent impossibilities. It has taught you the meaning of fear, of shammed indifference, of hollow triumph, and you emerge from your midyear examinations secretly cursing them for the wealth of experience they have given you.

Fix, for shame! Bestir yourselves. The battle is not to the strong. Who you fail, you are the real victors in this race for rank. Come, come, dry your tears. The end is not yet.

A SUGGESTION.

Everyone who has visited Smith remembers the Note Room. It is a convenient place to meet your friends, and notes left there are sure to reach their destination. Many Wellesley girls have felt the need of some such room here, but of the already overcrowded condition of College Hall, have felt that it would be necessary to wait until the Student-Alumni Building is built. They have entirely overlooked the fact that a fully-equipped Note Room is at their service, though they are making use of only half of its facilities. What better meeting place than College Hall Centre? What more definite and convenient spot to meet your friends than under Harris’s shadow? And why not make the palms, already extremely ornamental, useful as well by attaching our notes to them? It is possible that pins might injure their leaves, but ribbons in the various colors of our class colors would be harmless and would add an interesting touch of color. They could be bought in any desired lengths at the Bookstore at the price of a resident mail stamp.

Let us not neglect the opportunities nearest at hand!

CAMPUS NOTES.

Miss Emily G. Ball, who is in charge of the Department of Economics at Wellesley College, has been named by Mayor Fitzgerald for the fifth place on the city planning board. Her colleagues, appointed the day before, are President Ralph Adams Cram of the Boston Society of Architects, William C. Ewing of the United Improvement Association, Henry Abrahams of the Boston Central Labor Union and John Jackson Walsh, an East Boston attorney.

Miss Ball is a member of the Immigration Commission and has traveled extensively. She has also written extensively upon problems which the new board will be called upon to consider.

At the conference of the Collegiate and Preparatory School Teachers of the Bible held in Earl Hall, Columbia University, December 30, Professor Kendrick, head of the Department of Biblical History and Literature, read a paper on “The Study of the Bible Offers.”

At a meeting of the Society of Biblical Literature and Exegesis in the Jewish Theological Seminary, New York City, December 29th, Miss Eleanor D. Wood, instructor in Biblical History, read a paper on “The Worship of Bedriyah at Esh Shariaphat.” Stereopticon illustrations accompanied the paper.

THROUGH THE ON-LOOKING GLASS.

"What is the matter?" exclaimed Alice as the White Queen came in looking rather flustered and out of breath.

"Nothing of any importance," replied the White Queen. "In coming through the corridor just now, I met some girls who were in a hurry, so I was knocked down and trampled upon."

"That was too bad," said Alice sympathetically. "I am sure it was mere thoughtlessness on the part of the girls."

"Yes," replied the White Queen in a resigned tone, "I had not supposed that it was done with恶意 afterthought. Don't be disturbed," she added, as Alice still looked troubled. "It happens often. I am growing quite used to it. I was looking for you," continued the White Queen after she had rested a little, "to tell you about such an interesting meeting which I have just attended, as an on-looker."

"What was it?" asked Alice.

It was a convention called to discuss plans for enforcing education. My dear, it was grand! The hall was crowded and the enthusiasm was simply wonderful.

"Tell me all about it," said Alice.

The principal speakers, replied the White Queen, "were a professor of Cogito, a professor of Obliviscology, a professor of Sciolism, and a professor of Uncivil Law, and they were all stars. The great majority of the people present were in favor of enforcing education by leaving the classics entirely out of it. The professors of Cogito and of Obliviscology both argued that students would gain quite as much from the study of either of those subjects as from the study of Latin, if they only gave as much time to it, and everybody applauded. But the professor of Sciolism held a different view from most of the others. He said that he believed in the study of the classics; but he thought we had been going at it in the wrong way. He would advise taking young students unprijudiced by any knowledge of the classics and turning them loose in English, or any other modern literature, to hunt down the influence of the classics; then, when they had found the influence and correlated it, they might be ready to go back and find the classics. Don't laugh," she commanded, as she saw a smile creeping over Alice's face, "the professor of Sciolism is a very earnest person. He is one of the most ardent deformers of the day and his feelings would be hurt if he knew that any one failed to take him seriously."

"What position did the professor of Uncivil Law take?" asked Alice.

"He simply remarked that anyone could see that his subject was in no way indebted to the past," replied the White Queen. "After that a professor of Philosophy tried to speak, but as he was known to have old-fashioned ideas in regard to the place of the classics in education, the chairman told him that his time was up before he began. There was one man there," she added, "who aroused my curiosity. He did not say anything during the discussion, although he occasionally looked volumes, but at the close of the meeting when the deformers were cheering themselves, he said something in a low tone which I did not understand. It sounded like this,—'dubt deus que sines finem,' but I don't know what that means."

"I have no time to tell you now," said Alice, "I am busy to-day studying for examinations."

"Here's a 'busy' notice on your door," replied the White Queen, "so I came right in. I have brought you a set of questions on various subjects which you will find very useful. I wanted to help you."

"You would have helped me more by staying away," thought Alice, but she said nothing and took the paper which the White Queen offered her. "These do not look like ordinary examination questions," she said, after glancing at the paper.

"No, they are not," said the White Queen, "they are extra-ordinary. See how many of them you can answer. The first is a question in general history."

"When was the world created?" asked Alice, reading from the paper. "What a nonsensical question!" she exclaimed.

"Not at all," replied the White Queen. "These educational deformers of whom I have been telling you, who have such progressive ideas, decided to fix the date at 1492 A.D. There was a little talk in the convention in favor of an earlier date, some old fogies wanting to put it as early as 1066, but they were outvoted by a large majority. Here's all the hurry and legaity in regard to this planet's having been inhabited earlier than 1492 A.D. Are you to be regarded as fairy tales and forgotten just as soon as possible?"

"Some people will not have much to forget," remarked Alice in an undertone, and then she read the next question,—

"What is the difference between the signs of the times and the co-signs?"

"That," said the White Queen proudly, "is a question in trigonometry, you see."

"I don't see," said Alice. "If this question has anything to do with trigonometry, you have made a mistake in spelling."

"Spelling," replied the White Queen, "is an offended, it is a matter of individual preference and should never be discussed between friends. If this is not a question in trigonometry, it is a question in current topics. The tango is one of the signs of the times, and the tango tango is a co-sign and you ought to know the difference between them. Take the next question," she added, and Alice read it.

"Why did not the Romans discover America?" That question, she remarked, "does not seem quite consistent with the first one."

"Consistency," said the White Queen, "is the enemy of progress. Can you answer the question?"

"No," said Alice, "What is the answer?"

"There is no answer," replied the White Queen. "The Romans had no excuse for not discovering America, especially after one of their own writers had predicted that it would be discovered in later ages. It is because of their negligence in this matter that the Romans are now to be abolished."

"I suppose you will say next," said Alice, "that the Pilgrim fathers ought to be abolished, because they did not build the submarine."

"It would be a great convenience if they had attended to it," replied the White Queen, with a sigh.

"I cannot waste any more time with these absurd questions," said Alice, giving back the paper. "Very well," said the White Queen pettishly, "if you fail in your examinations, it will not be my fault."

CAMPUS NOTES.

At the recent opening of the new Women's City Club of Boston, Professor Emily G. Baleh and Mary C. Wiggins, '85, Executive Secretary of the Con- sumer's League of Massachusetts, were among the speakers.

Observatory House was gaily decorated December 6, for the "granddaughters' party." Professor Horford's gift, the wonderful Chinese embroidery, covered one side of the reception room and a pro- fusion of rare flowers, the gift of Mrs. Whitin, were everywhere.

Each grand-daughter was immediately "tagged" with a card on which was a college seal, a bow of navy blue, and the name of the daughter and mother with the couple's initials.

Mrs. Durant, Mrs. Whitin and President Pendle- ton received with Miss Whitin and College songs were sung for Mrs. Durant. There are now in college fifty-seven grand-daughters, nineteen of them in the Freshman Class. Fifty-two have already taken degrees. The mothers represent every year of the college life down to 1893.

An exhibition of photographs of unusual interest has just been hung in the Wellesley Art Museum through the courtesy of Miss Emma J. Fitz of Bos- ton. The subjects are well-heads and scenes from their immediate localities. The photographs are from port of the large number taken personally or other- wise collected by Miss Fitz during her long study of the subject in the cities and towns of southern Europe.

The localities represented are principally Venice and the Adriatic provinces of Bosnia, Hersegovina and Dalmatia, and the period covered is from early Byzantine work of the sixth to the ninth centuries, through the later Byzantine and Gothic styles to the Renaissance. Some are in pave courts and cloisters, others in public squares and streets, or in gardens and churches, so that the island of Crete, the towns of Italy. They are full of sun- light and the reflected radiation brings out the beauty of texture. In addition, the photographs have an architectural interest, as many were des- signed by the architects of the palaces with which they are connected.

Miss Fitz also has many lantern slides of the same subjects, and showed a few of them in the lecture room at the art building.

Every high school graduate in Nebraska receives a letter from the University of Nebraska congratulating him on his graduation and urging him to consider the advantages offered by the State University.

A vocational summer school, with practical men and women in charge of it, was in operation in Baltimore, last year. Printing and woodwork were among the subjects taught the boys; the girls had cooking, sewing, and other household branches.

The National Kindergarten College, in Chicago, devoted a large part of its summer programme to the methods of Dr. Montessori. Two of Dr. Montessori’s graduate students, who have spent over a year with her in Rome, laid charge of the practice work with the children.

School children and teachers of Painte Coupee Parish, in the flood district of Louisiana, planted fifteen fruit and pecan trees last year. Superintendent Trudeau has also a plan whereby road work in the parish will be done by school boys.

Students at the Georgia State Normal School at Athens, Georgia, study rural sociology as applied to their own districts, so that when they go out to teach they know the opportunities and needs of the locality better than those who have lived in it all their lives. How this work makes for community betterment is told by E. C. Brannon in a bulletin just issued by the United States Bureau of Education.
