TREE DAY.

In spite of a threatening storm, a large assembly of alumni and faculty were waiting on Tower Court Hill, when at 3 o'clock on Tree Day Tuesday, the classes made their entrance on the green. In two columns, the seniors in academic dress carrying arm bouquets of red roses, the other classes in white, bearing garlands of their class flowers, the students approached, meeting in the center of the green to form a great crescent. After the speech of welcome by Rebecca Meeker, the alumni joined with the students in "Alma Mater" and the classes advanced to their place on the hill.

THE CEREMONY OF THE SPADE.

The Tree-Day program opened, as is the custom, with the ceremony of the spade, Minnie Gould, 1919, as Alice in Wonderland, introducing the speakers, Margaret Goldschmidt, 1918, and Helen Merrill, 1919, dressed as Tupelo and Trudelle, in suits of purple and yellow. Interclass rivalry has afforded ample material this winter for the fun-making speeches of the giver and the receiver of the spade and, although both classes received one extremely clever "slam" before the spade was finally given over to 1919, Sophomore and Freshmen alike showed splendid spirit throughout.

A VISION OF WELLESLEY.

It was especially appropriate that 1916, the class which had learned to know and love the old Wellesley before her greatest crisis and which has been privileged to remain after that time to see the new Wellesley well established, should have chosen for her Tree Day a theme peculiar to Wellesley, instead of the two myths usually given. On this occasion the Seniors and Freshmen united to present in dancing the history of the College. From the moment that the Freshman mistress, as the Spirit of Progress, summoned from "the blue hill of the Ideal" the Senior mistress, representing the Vision of the College Beautiful, until Wellesley, accompanied always by Faith, had watched the Despair and Grief occasioned by the Fire, changed to Hope and Promise, and was led by the Coming Era to see herself once again "mirrored in the Vision's steadfast eyes," the pageant was in beauty and dignity of thought, spirit, and presentation, worthy of its name—A Vision of Wellesley.

One of the most impressive scenes of the entire pageant was the entrance of the Senior Mistresses. Priscilla Barrow, as the Vision of the College Beautiful, and her attendants, Marian Mitchell, Pauline Shorey, and Madeleine Gibson, as Love, Loyalty, and Service. In lovely nymph-like costumes in all the delicately-blended shades of the Opheilia roses which crowned the staff of the Mistress, Hester Gibson, 1919, as the Spirit of Progress, and her aides, as Companion Spirits, heralded her approach. The Mistress herself, advancing from the entrance of the Art Building, down the long hill, and across the green, was attired in a graceful robe of white satin, stately in its simplicity, its regal train of brilliant Wellesley blue flowing from her shoulders and harmonizing perfectly with the shaded blues and greens of the gowns of her attendants. The costuming throughout was so effective both in coloring and in design that it probably contributed more than anything else, except the theme itself, to the decided success of the pageant. The soft grey which predominated in Wellesley's costume, was heightened just enough by the clear blue in which the artistic figure of Faith was attired and by the rose draperies of the Seven Virtues attending him, while the blending of orange, reds, and grays, in the costuming of the Spirit of the Fire, the Smoke, and the Flames was a masterpiece of color combination.

While the appeal of the pageant's theme and the artistic designing of its costumes were important factors of its success, the dancing, as always, gave to Tree Day its greatest charm. Dorothy Loud, 1916, as Wellesley, and Muriel Baker, 1919, as Faith, danced with such grace and such sensitive interpretation of their roles, that the spectators begrudged them the idle moments they spent on the green.

Olive Forestall, 1916, as Strength, gave her dance the spirit of freedom and buoyancy, while Elizabeth Rafferty, 1916, made her interpretation of the same music, as was appropriate to her role of Play, distinctly joyous and vivacious. While great commendation is also due the groups who represented astronomy and botany, the spectacle for which 1916's Tree Day will particularly be remembered, is the dance of the Fire, presented by Helen Gehris and the Department of Hygiene. Daring down from the hills, their brilliant scarfs flashing in the wind, and driving all before them, they turned the green into a dancing mass of flames and smoke, finally flickering away to leave Wellesley and Faith at hand, confronted by Despair and Grief. The work of Helen Gehris as the Spirit of the Fire was remarkable for its grace, its freedom, and its vigor. However, the golden-clad figure of the Coming Era at whose approach Grief and Despair were changed to Hope and Promise, cannot be overlooked. Perhaps Elizabeth Downer, 1916, in this role danced with more perfect technique and greater lightness and grace, than any other of the afternoon's performers.

As great as is the credit due to the solo and group dancers whose time and effort went so far to perfect the Tree Day Pageant, still greater acknowledgment must be made to Miss Edna B. Mansfield,

A DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE.

Longfellow put a classic line into his Priscilla’s mouth when he made her utter the famous “Why don’t you speak for yourself, John?” which is heard quoted so often. The question is applicable, doubtless, to most people in most walks of life, but it seems to tend to make many an individual in reality the effete apologist of his mind and heart, and a great cloud of self-deception, of thought and action as many of us do—should be often the proverbial flock of sheep, unquestioningly following a more vigorous leader over all manner of terrain of opinion and prejudice. How often we hear the words which are evidence of this sad state; “So and so says—and she ought to know,” “People say,” “Everybody thinks so,” and so on, ad infinitum. Our College is rich in problems which challenge each and every one of us. Don’t let us meet them with borrowed ideas—even though the ideas may be those of a thoughtful majority! Let us express ourselves honestly! If we know nothing about a subject under discussion, let us withhold opinion until we have found out about it from reliable sources and drawn our own unbiased conclusions. Public opinion is a powerful factor, and a good one if there is a foundation of well-grounded proof beneath it, but there is great danger of missing a truth in a current of opinion which may be the extravagant outgrowth of unfounded rumor. It is hard to explain in any other way the rapid spread of “juicy morals” of gossips and wild rumors concerning persons and events in these days. If we would think a little more, and talk a little less, and speak to ourselves when we do talk, our College would be a far saner community.

M. G., 1918.

OPINUM.

“Books,” says Anatole France with his surprising and somewhat startling humor, “are the opium of the occident.” In other words, too much reading—a tendency of western culture in general—brings with it, along with beautiful dreams and visions, a certain stupefying influence that dulls one’s perceptions and loosen one’s hold on the real world even as does the opium of the opium-eating. It’s a good vacation thought and when we are planning our programs of reading in summer reading it will do no harm for us to think of it a little. Let’s make what reading we do this summer count (and there will be many hours when we can’t even try to work out the puzzle with a good book) but let’s not let our book life dominate our actual life. There’s so much to see, so much to do, so many true adventures with real people to discover, that it seems a waste of time to take these things at second hand in books. Some of us need no admonition in this matter, but there are others who do. This is for such. Perhaps, after all, the vacation spent “profitably” in becoming acquainted with literature’s masterpieces of literature, is not the most valuable vacation possible. This is hasty—but it’s worth thinking over.

FREE PRESS.

THE CHALLENGE ANSWER.

The Joint Council is glad of the opportunity offered by the Free Press in last week’s College News to clear up some current misconceptions about the nature of Tree Day in general, and the intentions of the Joint Council in regard to its situation. The writer has a “Challenge” had been to the advantage of a few more years in College, she would not, perhaps, have made the mistake of supposing that, in altering the character of Tree Day to be in spirit to that of a past era was then and is now being destroyed. Tree Day has evolved slowly. The first simple myth was introduced in 1886. The first repetition of dancing at Garden Party occurred with the class of 1887, because it rained on Tree Day. As the beauty and elaborateness of the dancing has increased, the expense has soared, the planning and actual work has become, more and more, a severe strain on all students, especially seniors, and upon the dancing instructors from the hygiene department. This elaboration has also tended to obscure the original nature of the day as essentially a Tree Day, which should be sacred to returning alumni and to undergraduates as a Wellesley day, with the ceremony of the tree’s chief feature.

The movement for simplification, which is not the sudden and arbitrary decision our critic supposes, but the outcome of several years’ growing conviction that a halt must be called somewhere, is an important appeal to all of us. As we love our tradition so must we love our tradition to our alumni. It is rather an attempted reversion to the older, simpler Tree Day, such as older generations of alumnae look back upon and cherish.

The rumor that Tree Day is to be abolished, or re-directed, to a given time place on the green, is quite without foundation. It is true, Miss Homan’s just decision that the Department of Hygiene will be unable to bear the burden of future Tree Days, has made the elimination of the elaborate myth and group dancing necessary. Just what the nature of the new Tree Day will be, is as yet impossible to say. It rests with the present undergraduates to shape it into something which shall be more truly, more individually Wellesley’s own day than anything that has hitherto been in the past. Is it not true that our myths have been verging on the stereotyped? Of course, Tree Day this year was a glorious exception, for the simple reason that it was essentially a Wellesley theme. The Tree Day of the future, with the exception of the elaborate event once in four years, should be a simpler embodiment of some such uniquely Wellesley idea. Shall we value our Tree Day the less because it loses some of its gorgeous pageantry, and gains in character and thought? And will not the body of undergraduel and alumnae agree with the Joint Council that, in view of existing conditions, this is the sane and wise and truly loyal course to pursue?

MAGAZINE COMPETITION.

The Magazine offers a prize of $5 in each of the following departments:

1. Poetry, Fiction, Essay or Criticism, Book Review.

The Magazine Board unites with the Barnesworth’s Association in offering a $75 prize for an original play to be published in the Magazine and acted in the Barn.

Competition closes August 15. Contributions should be sent to Grace Ballard, 25 Grove St., Oneida, N. Y.

 Further information, see Grace Ballard, 77 Beebe.

This annual Magazine competition offers a splendid opportunity for students to show their interest and ability in writing and just the added zest which the themes of coming plays should result in having many to try their hand in the contest. The prize offered for the best play is a new departure and it is hoped that it will prove a popular feature and result in some interesting pieces of dramatic work suitable for production in the Barn. You’d like to see your own work acted, wouldn’t you? Then why not try your luck? Don’t forget the other parts of the content, however. If your talents don’t seem to lie along the line of dramatic writing, perhaps you may have unsung possibilities as a poet, a short story writer, a critic, or a reviewer.

ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION NOTES.

{SWIMMING.

Good news travels fast and by this time the whole college knows that swimming in the Lake is now permitted. Between the hours of 2 and 4:30, P.M., Mr. Wilson is on hand to watch the swimmers and to give help if it should be needed and during this time, students may swim to their hearts’ content, provided they keep within the lines marked off by buoys. This is very important. It does not make one atom of difference whether you are a good swimmer or not; if you do not keep to the limits set, you are lessening the chances that this arrangement—so welcome to us all—can be continued. Swimming has been forbidden in the past because of danger. The present plan minimizes this danger. Let’s all co-operate to make the plan a success.

Crew Competition.

Crew Competition, this year, will take place on Float Night, June 13, at 6:30 P.M., in Tower Court Cove. Following competition the cups and W’s will be awarded—also the novice cups in all sports. The rowing will be judged for form.

Exercises for Ex-College Girls.

Dr. Skarsstrom has prepared a set of exercises intended for the use of those who feel that the sudden change from the activity of college life to the less strenuous life at home is harmful to one’s health. These directions may be secured by any who are interested, from Adelaide Ross, Tower Court.

THE WELLESLEY COLLEGE NATIONAL BANK.

Why do you buy Post Office Money Orders or Express Money Orders and pay the same for the same when you can get for New York drafts which are at least as available anywhere in the United States at no cost? We furnish these free to our depositors; to others who pay cash for the same.

TREE DAY.

the Director, and Dorothy Rundle, chairman of the committee, from whose careful planning and skilful management resulted the beauty of the theme, the charm of the costume, and the character of the dancing which comprised "A Vision of Wellesley." 1919 REVEALS HER TREE DAY "SECRETS."

The grand recessional of Tree Day dances was not yet well off the green when the representatives from 1919, which composed it, broke ranks and, following the class colors, joy with streams of the class colors, around which, as is the custom, reunions were held.

ROSE PLANTING—IN STONE HALL PARLOR.

Nothing daunted by the downpour which started almost in the very middle of the Tree Day ceremonies were over, 1917 gathered at seven o'clock in the evening for Rose Planting, and since the westwag was so disagreeable as to make our outdoor celebration out of the question this wise class did its rose planting (all but the actual putting of the plant in the ground) in Stone Hall parlor. 1919, also, careless of wind and weather, turned out in large numbers to witness the ceremony, thereby winning the hearty applause of all. Before these two classes thus assembled was enacted an exceedingly clever skit entitled "Alice in Blunderland, or the Follies of 1916." Grave, indeed, were the charges brought against this helpless maiden, who, among other offenses, had chased the Queen by planting a red rose tree—"and the Queen hates red roses." The resemblance of the characters to the well-known figures in "Alice in Wonderland," was strong, but it was not difficult to recognize our 1916 friends even under such disguise.

IPHIGENIA IN Aulis.

Tuesday evening of last week was made one of the most notable of this eventful June season by the presentation of the "Iphigenia in Aulis" by the Society of the Alpha Kappa Chi, under the able direction of Miss Bennett.

The clear, starry evening was most favorable, and the grassy stage with its background of shimmering birches in delicate leafage, made an exquisite setting for the outdoor action before the tent of Agamemnon. The solemn offerings at the altar made by the white-robed priestess and her attendants, gave the right note for the presentation of a Greek drama, a religious act in honor of Dionysius, god of the festival.

The rich choirs of the Women of Chalices gained the more interest for us because beautifully set to music by members of the College Music Department, and deserve the discriminating comments of a connoisseur, but all of us could enjoy the unity of the chorus and their leader in action and through long and intricate passages.

Costumes, war-chariot and other externals were carefully worked out to give us a sense of preparativeness (all but the actual putting of the plant in the ground) in Stone Hall parlor. 1919, also, careless of wind and weather, turned out in large numbers to witness the ceremony, thereby winning the hearty applause of all. Before these two classes thus assembled was enacted an exceedingly clever skit entitled "Alice in Blunderland, or the Follies of 1916." Grave, indeed, were the charges brought against this helpless maiden, who, among other offenses, had chased the Queen by planting a red rose tree—"and the Queen hates red roses." The resemblance of the characters to the well-known figures in "Alice in Wonderland," was strong, but it was not difficult to recognize our 1916 friends even under such disguise.

"The question might be raised whether, under Greek skies, where only bright colors satisfy the eye, and where even warriors wore cloaks strong in hue over their glittering armor, those Chaliskian women would have chosen for themselves such indefinite tints. To all that we enjoyed, add the somber casulence of the Greek in this play was once given, and can any lover of beauty feel that our world of letters would not be pitifully impoverished, if it yielded further to those who would cut loose from all beauty by making us strangers to its original form?"

The costume of the women in attendance on Clytemnestra were delightfully suggestive of Greek vase designs, as were the patterns on the robes of the chorus. The question might be raised whether, under Greek skies, where only bright colors satisfy the eye, and where even warriors wore cloaks strong in hue over their glittering armor, those Chaliskian women would have chosen for themselves such indefinite tints. To all that we enjoyed, add the somber casulence of the Greek in this play was once given, and can any lover of beauty feel that our world of letters would not be pitifully impoverished, if it yielded further to those who would cut loose from all beauty by making us strangers to its original form? TENNIS TOURNAMENT.

On Wednesday, May 31, the final double match of the annual tennis tournament was played, Amelia Parry, 1919, and Daisy Atterbury, 1918, played Sally Porter, 1917, and Margaret Jones, 1917, winning the match by a score of 9-7, 6-3. The match was brilliant in every sense of the word, both from individual spectacular playing and great team work. Margaret Jones did her most effective work at wonderful net playing. Sally Porter played a steady and effective back court game, and Daisy Atterbury was quick on her placing and passing work. Amelia Parry played a steady and brilliant all-around game, with an effective stroke and swing, sure return shots. The match went to the 1918 players after many hard-fought points.

The final singles were played Friday afternoon, between Amelia Parry, 1919, and Edith Ewer, 1917. The score was 6-0, 6-3. It was another very brilliant and interesting match, quite spectacular to watch. Edith Ewer played a very steady back court game, making some effective long drives. Amelia Parry, by her wonderful placing and her swing, low drives, won the match, and was congratulated as victor of the spring tournament.

GOLF TOURNEMENT.

On Saturday afternoon, May the twenty-seventh, the annual spring golf tournament was played. The match was a handicap match with a selected score of nine out of eighteen holes. Although the afternoon was cloudy about eight twosomes started from the first tee. At the end of eighteen holes Eleanor Russell and Meredith Hanley turned in an equal score of nine, and the third hole the chosen to be played as a deciding hole. At this point it began to rain. However the two who were tied played the third and then the fourth hole, halving them both. On the fifth green, the third hole, Hanley was successor and returned inside the club house where she was awarded the cup that Mr. George Davenport, a trustee of the College, presented. A much advertised "tea" in the form of fruit punch and sandwiches, was then served to the golfers and their galleries.

PARK SQUARE THEATER.

Victor Herbert's delightful operetta, "The Princess Pat," has just completed six weeks at the Park Square Theater, and judging by the prospects, the engagement will move to the summer months. It is the happiest of late spring attractions, for it has all the qualities which seem fittingly to harmonize with the season of the year when nature and the world are smiling, and the hearts of all are responsive to song and merriment. None knows better than Victor Herbert the art of composing music that appeals universally to the ears of the multitude, his lifting, winning melodies, his scholarly and at the same time tuneful orchestration with his jolly faculty of giving the humorous twist to accompanying strains, and his power of investing the whole with a singular intelligence of method well meeting him the title of America's premier composer. When we read the book and listen, it is a fitting co-worker of the composer, some of the best of our light operas resulting from their collaboration. And "The Princess Pat" is in all respects a credit to them, lovely to be as long-lived and well liked.

Much of the credit due for the beauty and brightness of the operas should fall upon the excellent company that John Coit has assembled to fill the different roles. The performances are given on Wednesdays and Saturdays. Mail orders will be given prompt and careful attention.—Adv.
THE PROLOGUE.

Alice.

Tweedledum and Tweedledee.

Discussion once essayed.

For Tweedledum said Tweedledee.

Should have his dear old spade.

Tweedledum. "The time has come," the Sophomore said, "To talk of many things.

Of spades—and horns—and paper bags—

Of Comp. and Math. flunkings.

Of why the Freshman class is green.

And how a Freshman sings."

Tweedledee. "But wait a bit," the Freshman cried, "For we have much to say.

Of May-day gowns, and ice-cream, too,

But chiefly Sophomore play,

And why the Sophomores failed to take

Our offers away."

Tweedledum. A lot of zest, we do believe,

Is what you chiefly need.

Much pep and vinegar beside

Are very good indeed.

Now, if you're ready, Freshman dear,

To answer, pray proceed.

Tweedledee.

O Sophomore, this word from you!

You should regret our zest,

For on the night of Sophomore play,

You thought us quite a pest,

And this was scarcely odd, because

Our plans you never guessed.

MORNING CHAPEL.

The morning service on June 4, was lead by Dr. William Merrill of New York City. His message was distinctly for communion, emphasizing not so much the idea of service as of remembrance. The text was John 15:5. "For apart from Me ye can do nothing." "This is an age of efficiency," said Mr. Merrill, "but we must take care not to forget, in this vigorous life we lead, the call of Christ to simply remember Him. The life of service is worth nothing unless it is accompanied by the Christ spirit of inwardness, trust and graciousness."

To those of us who heard and enjoyed President Thomas' sermon, last Sunday, Dr. Merrill's sermon was of particular interest, following as it did something of the same line of thought. It is quite significant that two such prominent religious leaders should bring to us, in the midst of our busy College life, the message that work without faith is dead.

VESEYERS.

Dr. Merrill spoke again at vespers. The germ of his idea is found in Micah 6:8, "What doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?" The first two articles mean truth to the essential principle of Christianity, character. The last emphasizes the outward practice of religion and means loyalty to the church. The true Christian life combines the two loyalties, and it is necessary for educated people especially to stress the latter.

CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION MEETINGS.

CAMPUS.

Amy Rothchild led the campus meeting, last Wednesday night. Her subject was "The Obligation of a College Education." Those who teach do so because they feel that in College they have gained something which they can pass on to others. The religious life of College is one of its most important elements, and the obligation to pass on the ideals of college is so much the greater.

VILLAGE.

Florence Salzer emphasized in her talk last Wednesday night, the need of a personal Bible study. The listening to great speakers is not to be excluded, but it does not cover all. A spontaneous personal study, with an impulse from within, brings a great deal that cannot be obtained in any other way.

SPRING IN GEORGIA.

The following poem of Florence E. Homer, '86, appeared recently in the Chicago "Advance."

I love the paths of Georgia
When Spring has tiptoed by,
And touched to gold the jessamine,
And flung the dogwood high;
The distant homestead glimmers
In a rose, peach-blow mist,
Or waves from porch and gable
Wisteria's amethyst.

The scarlet-budded magnolias
Burst bright against the pines,
And pere, beside the garden path,
The star of Bethesda shines.
Red is the rain-washed soil,
And tender blue is the sky.
Oh, I love the paths of Georgia
When Spring has tiptoed by!

NEWS NOTES.

'85. In an editorial of the Akron Beacon Journal appears the following acknowledgment of the work of Dr. Emily P. Gregory, formerly of the University of Akron:

"The fact that Akron has had a death rate from many communicable diseases higher than the rest of the country is a standing disgrace to the city.

A few pioneers have preached to us about health. Dr. Emily P. Gregory, formerly of the University of Akron, faculty, a year and a half ago told us that conditions were deplorable here. But the then city administration instead of checking up her facts and starting measures to relieve the conditions she truthfully portrayed, called her in and read her a lecture about alarming people unnecessarily.

Now it happens that some of our largest industries came to our conclusion recently that the amount of sickness and the number of deaths among their employees meant an unnecessary and wasteful drain on industry, and called in an expert to see just what the conditions were in Akron. This expert, Dr. Ogden of Cornell University, not only locked up Dr. Gregory's charges, but went further and showed us conclusively that something must be done."

'85-'86. Edna A. Hale was a passenger on board the Channel steamer, "Sussex," which was torpedoed late in March. Miss Hale escaped injury and was able to continue her journey to Paris without the loss of even her baggage. She has been a resident of London for the past seventeen years.

'06. Emilie P. Callaway is now under contract to Belasco to appear in a new play by Roy Cooper Ogmore, opening in New York at the Lyceum Theater, about August 11. She is now playing a special engagement in stock.

'07. Jessie Fletcher Joslin is in Arkansas with her husband, who is surveying for oil.

'08. Gertrude C. Barsey, M. A., Wellesley, 1910, Ph.D. Northwestern University, 1915, is reappointed instructor in philosophy at Goucher College.

'09. Grace Red Simboli and Mr. Simboli, a worker at Union Settlement, N. Y., are to do settlement work in New Rochelle, next year. Mr. Simboli has been investigating conditions in New Rochelle, and doing social work there since January in addition to his work at Union Settlement in New York. His report on conditions in the Italian quarter in New Rochelle—a report which Mr. Simboli assisted in preparing—was so startling that it aroused bitter opposition on the part of various forces in the city. The New Rochelle Woman's Club accepted the report unanimously and has appointed Mr. Simboli head social worker for next year, of a settlement in the Italian district.

'14. Margarette Kehr, M. A., 1914, is appointed Scholar in Philosophy at Bryn Mawr College.

'16. Edith Ryder and her sister Margarette, 1915, have been taking a "First Aid" course in Rochester.

'17. Dorothy Brown Hoffman is living in Pasadena.

'19. Ruth Neumyer and Chelsie Final, formerly of 1919, spent the winter in California, and have now returned to Duluth.

'20. Pauline Snyder spent February and March in Los Angeles.

'21. Eleanor Mason has been taking courses in English Literature and History at Columbia.

'15. Marjorie Armstrong, H. P. L., 1914, and formerly of 1915, graduated this spring from the University of California, where she has been teaching. Next year she will go to Florida to teach, three of the other courses she has been teaching in the Hygiene and Gymnastics Departments.

'17. Esther Junkerman has recently returned from a trip to Honolulu with her parents.

'22. Fannie Wood has been teaching in a school at Swarthmore, and is now, under the guidance of the teacher of that city, a student in that school.

THE FIRST WELLESLEY FLOAT.

The following interesting account found by a number of one of the first classes in the journal which she kept in the first years of college she has very kindly forwarded to the News and Magazine.

Wellesley College, May, 1876.

We are happy to-day—we and Mr. Durant! The College boats have come, five beauties, the Evangeline, Maud Muller, Pryden, Undine and Argo, names suggesting poets. They are for all the students, and the few to whom they are for the crews only, and the crews are the collegians proper with a few A Preps. We are already assigned to our boats and have received our directions and had our first boat drill June, 1876. The boat crews are really in shape now and are actually rowing and not merely "catching crabs," entangling oars and splashing in effectually, in the water, and we have such good times!

Each crew has its own color in a pretty banner and barge and sailor-hat band; light blue is Maud Muller's color and the other boats have crimson, blue, green and violet; a sixth boat, the Galatea, has been added to the fleet, and the boats have somehow drifted together in affectionate pairs; the Pryden rowers are the gallant escorts of the fair dames of the Evangeline, and the tools Argonauts play the same part to the maids of the Maud Muller, preparing their own and the Maud for the evening cruise and standing with oars in porgula fashion while the latter's crew pass beneath the embarking.

The first part of our hour is honest, stern drill, with every girl sailor on the alert to bear and obey orders and work; then we have a lovely, lazy time of floating by side by side on the shadowy or moonlight lake, singing our songs together or to each other. Some of these are foolish jingles enough, but we laugh as we sing, "Here's to the Pryden crew, they're so gallant and so true." "Here's to the Argo, for she has got a jollyarge." "Here's to the Preps, in rowing they're adepts." "Here's to pretty Maud and the Sophs (or brains) she's got on board." We sing also old familiar songs and Delia Lyman plays on her guitar, and then we sing the verses which our verse-makers have adapted to old tunes—"For Once to the Forest," "In the Starlight," and others. Here is the serenade of the Argo to Maud Muller:

"O pretty maid of Walban, fast-famed in song of song,
Thou gatherest from the waters the straws of fame and use.
May kindly replays waiting and nympha of ocean to be,
Bare to thee, Maud Muller, lauding thy sheaves with toil!"

The Munds sing back to the Argo:

"O graceful modern Argo gliding over fair Walban Lake,
You have many a gallant sailor worthy of your old namesake,
O lymphsome maiden Argonauts floating over sum-

On whatever coast you seek it may you find your Golden Fleece!"

Then we sing back to the Argo with her flag of purple hue,
And here is to the Argo and all her gallant crew!"

The general chorus of the Evangeline's song runs:

"Then here's to Walban Lake and the crews that is on it now,
And here's to our captains three times three, as we go.

The Argo decked with royal purple flag and the green of the fair Undine,
And sweet Maud Muller with ribbons of light blue are as far a sight as we can see.

But of all the bolts that on it float there are none that blend so true
As the red and white of the Pryden boat and the ribbon of navy blue."

THE WELLESLEY COLLEGE NEWS.

In years to come, perhaps, there will be shells and races and splendid water festivals here, but none of the girls to come will have shorter, happier hours together than we have had these summer evenings in our best play of the year, on lovely Lake Waban. And I like the memory lines that Carrie Newell has written in her autograph book:

"O me, my pleasant sails upon the lake.

My sweet, wild, fresh three-quarters of an hour!"

We shall be sincerely grateful for any gifts at any time. "He gives twice who gives quickly."
