WE MOBILIZE!

President Pendleton's plan for the mobilization of Wellesley recruits—an adaptation of the plan evolved for Goucher College by Professor Lillian Welch and approved and accepted by the Presidents of Coe, Mt. Holyoke and Wellesley in conference at Washington on Saturday, May 23—has enlisted nine hundred and four enthusiastic students in a great effort for personal efficiency. The recruits drill and train in matters of sleeping, eating, studying and recreating with the regularity of clockworks. Drilling started Monday, when all nine-hundred recruits met in a huge phalanx on the athletic field to be put through their paces by Dr. Skarstnou. The drilling is not for any direct advantage in being acquainted with military tactics, but it develops an "esprit de corps," a feeling of mass unity that is truly inspiring.

The Goucher plan has as its basis the facts that the efficiency of our country is dependent upon the efficiency of individuals, and that it is the obligation of every citizen to perfect himself in the work which lies nearest him in order to be able to serve more capably when immediate participation in war work is demanded of him. It deals largely with the small events of every day life, but those students who have enlisted under its realization that it involves difficulties great enough to justify its being given the presuming name "Mobilization."

A detailed statement of the meaning of enlistment under the Wellesley plan is given in the "Plan of Mobilization for Students and Faculty of Wellesley College."

Adaptation of the Goucher Plan.

I. Physical Efficiency—To begin at once and to continue.
II. Organization of special work to be carried on during the present term and continued during the summer.
III. Plan of work for next year to be presented in April.

Mental Efficiency—1. Study of problems of international peace and reconstruction. 2. Preparation along technical lines.

I. PHYSICAL EFFICIENCY.
Committee of faculty and students—Miss Hooper, Dr. Raymond; Miss Goucher; Miss Carrie Partlow, Miss Henrietta Mackenzie, Miss Marion Wallace, Miss Moody, Chairman.

This phase of the work to be organized by houses—plan presented in detail and carried out under "captains" consisting of one or two heads of houses. 2. Students to be appointed who can serve as "lieutenants" in drill. 3. Recruiting officers to be appointed to act in cooperation with the joint faculty-student committee. This committee will also serve as an advisory committee.

A. HOUSES—Arrangement for work-days.
Approximately 8 hours work—not less than forty-five a week.
8 hours exercise, meals, usual activities, reading of current events and special work as for example: 1. Red Cross; 2. First Aid; 3. Navy Unit League; 4. Social Welfare.
8 hours sleep with plenty of fresh air—retiring at 10:30, rising at 6:30.
Regularity in chapel attendance.
B. DRESS.
Economy in dress; choice of sensible styles in clothes and shoes.
C. DIET.
Eating proper food in sufficient quantity.

Ruth L. Lane, 1918, senior president.

"FOR GOD, FOR COUNTRY AND FOR HOME."

"Precisely what are the most important things that women are now to do in this country?" The answer to this question, for which the student body has been restless and eager to join the National Organization. The "nurses" in proper caps and sleeve bands, helped those who were doubtful to make up their minds. The total number of new members was 386, and the money taken in amounted to $842. Some people signed pledges, and we are reminded that these are some day this week at the Elevator Table. Watch the Bulletin Board!

At the tent, opportunity was given to sign up to knit for our Wellesley ship. The results follow: Sweaters, 338; scarfs, 101; helmets, 62; wristers, 35; socks, 22.

NEVERTHELESS—MAY DAY.

Hoop Rolling and NUMERALS.

To be sure, it wasn't exactly clear on May Day morning but still it didn't actually rain, so we all forget that May first was almost a fortnight Off and assembled to witness the annual Marathon. An unusually large number of hoops and abbreviated gowns appeared on College Hall Hill soon after eight on Saturday morning, May 12, an indication which proved that Senior dignity had once more been cast to the winds, as 1917 did its part to pass down the tradition of hoop rolling. The Seniors embraced the opportunity to indulge in every known form of locomotion. Some apparently absent-minded souls became so engrossed in the art of rolling that this latest accomplishment was supplied to caps and people, as well as to the proverbial hoops. The road looked very smooth but we concluded that it wasn't, for many of the competitors found it necessary to make detours into Rhodes and Gillmor. However Helen MacKinnon, the winner of this contest, kept bravely (Concluded on page 4)

PROPORTIONAL PATRIOTISM.

Is it part of a reasonably ordered life—which is the object of our mobilization plan to outline for us—to spend five and ten minute intervals, scraps of time which when pieced together make a whole hour or even two, in squabbling to determine whether we are to be reminded of habits of personal cleanliness, whether knitting can be counted as serious work, and whether as recruits we may sleep from twelve to eighteen rather than from ten-thirty to six-thirty if we so desire? The tendency of certain recruits to squabble over the wording of mobilization rules, to put the freest interpretation possible upon them, to disregard their spirit and attempt to follow their letter only in a somewhat evasive manner, has created among some of them a feeling that disgust and contempt for the whole scheme. The attitude of the latter students is that there is no use for them to enlist when without doing so they are keeping practically all training regulations as they are-put to a maximum limit, and there is no justification for applying the significant term "mobilization" to what is in reality only an abused outline for everyday college life.

Students of the first group at least are altogether within their rights. Every recruit is privileged to a certain point to interpret the regulations in her own way. Where the work of the individuals enlisted under a set of rules is so varied, there must be flexibility of interpretation. Moreover, the object of the scheme itself demands such freedom. The individual may accomplish a great deal under compulsion, but she gains personal efficiency only when with her endeavor right-ly directed, she willfully forms habits of economy in time, an alternate gain of this sovereignty gained by the individual is therefore directly proportional to the strictness with which she lives up to the training rules.

The attitude of the " slackers "—if non-recruits can be called " slackers "—any more than the " slackers " who are taking life easy in spite of enlistment—seems to us an entirely mistaken one. To be reasonable, first, they must judge the advantage of enlisting, not by the spirit in which others are living under the new scheme, but by the spirit in which they personally would be willing to accept it, and, second, they must judge the scheme by the possibilities it offers for gain in efficiency rather than the gains made by those who are enlisting jejune.

But, right or wrong, have not both of the aforesaid groups of students entirely missed the object of the mobilization plan? They seem to regard it as a measure important only in the present, the take-life-easy recruit taking it like the assignment she " shuffs " through, failing to realize that she is worsting not her instructor but her future self, the what's-the-use-in-calling student failing to realize that little active participation in actual war work is the best preparation for mobilization in our every day duties as a measure of preparedness for months and perhaps years of grim struggle, is what is demanded of us at present. In a very large degree, the mobilization plan looks to the future. It is a preparation not for the strictly indoor life of the present, but will enable us to increase constantly in skill and endurance to meet the ever heightening demand, now only slightly felt, which the war is almost sure to bring upon us. Its great service to us now is that, if rigidly adhered to, it cannot but clarify our sense of values. The eight hours per day for sleep and the eight hours for serious work leave a short time in comparison with our past habits, for recreation. If we have gone into service seriously we must choose carefully just what we are to do in our recreation time and we cannot fail to realize that a wise choice means an increased amount of First Aid and Red Cross work and leaves no time for purposeless trips to the "vill" or to Boston and idle evenings of profitless sociability.

Daily life for the recruit can be made almost as easy or as hard as she herself chooses to make it, but the girl who has a really big spirit has found it as hard as President Pen-dleton prophesied and much different from the ordinary mode of college existence to justify the frequently repeated objection, "What's the use?" We are free to treat enlistment as we will, but our attitude now is conclusive evidence of our loyalty to our country's cause. Our patriotism is directly proportional to the rigidity with which we voluntarily apply the mobilization laws.

I. A Plea Against the Plan for Mobilization.

We need no reminder, at this hour, that the United States is a warring nation; that economy, so long pleaded for, must be practiced at last; in fact, that the hard times,—until now a cry of "Wolf, Wolf!"—have arrived. But if hard times are here now, harder ones are sure to come, sending in advance the problem of how we shall meet them.

Are we to pledge ourselves to play a part in an elaborate plan for mobilization which can not but direct our thoughts toward ourselves, away from those around us, or shall we try to live our regular lives making special effort to give as much of our time, our services, ourselves to others as is possible? To my mind, the plan of mobilization offered the students of Wellesley College is no more than a much ameliorated form of asceticism which lost favor with the passage of the Dark Ages. It urges that we have as a whip over us a scheduled arrangement of work and play, which, to many students, are already parts of their lives; it urges us to "do the extra time," to "get an extra hour in." Added to the strain would be an inevitable gloom, an absence of carefreelessness which often alone makes institutional life bearable.

On the contrary, we student the following her usual course of action, trying to keep her own thoughts and the thoughts of others away from the war, working better, playing better, undoubtedly sleeping better, and on the whole, through her cheerful outlook accomplishing more in the long run.

Germany has passed a law forbidding widows to wear signs of mourning, in order that the country shall seem no more gloomy than necessary. Why, in the United States, shall laws be imposed upon us, which operate in deepening the darkness of an outlook already somber enough in itself?—Alice B. Klien, 1918.

II. Simple Story of the Social Schedule.

In spite of the recent agitation over simplifying the social schedule, we still have our days more filled with non-academic demands. We begin to realize that much of the time we spend on subcription parties and dinners we might have saved. May we not have tried to make the change in the wrong way? This is what we did. In the first Forum of the year, each speaker begged to do away with that particular organization or activity in which she was least interested. Our scheme for an informal plan was bound not to accomplish its end. Are the social activities which we now have, exactly what we want? Are they up to the standard of the college? Do we get out of them what we put in?

Let us presuppose a college year in which there are no activities other than academic. Then let us find out what social elements we need and build them up about our academic work. First of all, we can dispense with drama plays and musical entertainments. During the academic year, no such plays are given each year. The plays all are of good calibre, but the crowning dramatic achievement is the Shakespeare play given by the Senior Class. The students choose their play and pick individual parts. To the Junior Class, it is an opportunity to study the text through the summer. At Christmas of the Senior year, they combine work under an expert trainer. At Commencement time, the Smith girls present a production dignified, finished, a piece of work as beautifully done as one rarely sees. The actors gain credit in their English Literature courses for this work. Thus here, the two activities, academic and social, co-operate with each other and play into each other's hands. The result is that both the academic and the extra-curricular are of which which was worth while. Here at Wellesley we make the mistake of giving too many plays, each under a, separate organization. Would it not be better to have a single all-college Dramatic Association? Music is another social requirement. Why could not our students in the Music department give concerts for the whole college? This has recently been tried out here with great success. It is done, for instance, at Oberlin College. A single student or group of students offer remarkably fine programs at short intervals.

We have a good example of the co-operation of the two phases of college life in our own department of Music, which combines college sports with the course in gymnastics. These are but a few suggestions. The point is, do we not waste time and energy in many activities of mediocre worth, when we might combine our work and our play for a few productions more worth while?—E. P. Hanaw.

III. Wellesley Versus the Pajama Slip.

Do we as women of Wellesley College want to gain the reputation of being unreliable, of being slack and shiftless? Are we, dawn deep in our hearts, proud of the fact that we have that handi-fully done as one rarely sees. The actors gain credit in their English Literature courses for this work. MISS REPLLEIER ENCOURAGES THE GENTLE READER.

Miss Agnes Replier delivered an informal essay to an enthusiastic gathering of students and faculty at Tower Court, Friday afternoon, May 12. The subject of her essay, "The Courageous Reader," might, Miss Replier explained, be as significantly expressed by the term "The Candid Reader." Independence in reading, individuality of taste, and the brave discrimination of literary qualities, are important things to cultivate. Miss Replier paid a tribute to Emerson, who, in spite of his inclination toward serious and thoughtful literature, in spite of his repudiation of Dickens, or Thackeray, unmindful of the theory of independence and candor in choosing books and authors, the deterioration of modern taste in literature, the substitution of superficial and thoughtless standards make it all the more necessary that people of culture and training should aim to know the best by individual standards. To do this, we should read naturally and spontaneously; we should not prescribe serious reading in artificial dosages, nor should our patrons pontificate a book merely because of its author. If a book does not give us, as we read it, some larger and more comprehensive sympathy, or stimulate our imagination and sense of humor, it is a decided waste of time, and it is far, far better we should read books for what they mean to us.

In applying these theories to children, it is important to remember that over-reading cramps their imagination, and surfeits their interest. Stories "written down" to children are calcareous; we should wait until the child is old enough to give themselves the great works in their original form. Thus, in our own reading, and in prescribing it to others, we should remember to approach books joyously and spontaneously, and to form our estimate of them candidly and objectively.

After Miss Replier's talk, Madame Dupriex appealed to us for aid for the Belgian children. She made her plea the more graphic by giving us a short and vivid account of her own experiences when the German invasion forced the evacuation of her home.

A TALK ON GARY SCHOOLS.

The system recently introduced into the schools of Gary, Indiana, and its progress was the subject for an informal talk with lantern slides given to Wellesley girls on Wednesday, May 9, by Mrs. Fernandes, the secretary of the school superintendent in that city.

The "balanced plan," as it is called, is based on the belief that the day divided equally between work and recreation would be good for the children. Also, since one-half the pupils in a given school would be outdoors while the other half was studying, only one-half the number of school-rooms would be needed and the expense would be lessened in the same proportion. Better equipment and more efficient teachers could be afforded. This plan was developed by Mr. Paul G. Wirt, Superintendent of Schools in Gary, and proved successful. The children are kept off the streets from eight o'clock in the morning until five in the afternoon. Recently Mr. Wirt carried the idea to New York City, where it is being adopted in spite of early opposition.

SPANISH HOMES AND HOME LIFE.

Those of the Spanish Department who heard Señor Ramón Jaen last year when he spoke to us in store for them when it was announced that he was to lecture on Spanish Homes, Thursday evening, at 8 o'clock in the Administration Building. They were not disappointed. With a little of the old lantern slides, he undertook to convince us that the home is the center of all Spanish activities. The pride and interest of the people is fixed upon it to a much greater extent than here in America. Lovers of light and sunshine, the majority of the people have constructed their houses about a little open court where they may enjoy the out doors without going away from home, to do so. Their desire for cleanliness and light is reflected in the fact that they have used light materials for the houses and that the women whiten the insides of the houses from the creek, which to us seems quite an unusual display of energy. Mr. Jaen spoke somewhat too of the small amount of freedom of the women there. Since they have not the privilege of taking part in affairs outside, many of them occupy their spare moments with embroidery equalized only by that of the women of Russia.

NURSING AND PUBLIC HEALTH.

The whole college has shown, in the past few months, its intense interest in the subject of nursing. It was, therefore, with unusual pleasure that we heard Miss Bissell, Superintendent of the College Infirmary, talk to us at Phi Sigma on May 8th, on the subject of nursing as a vocation for college women.

Every year more college women are taking up this work, for they see the great opportunities open to a woman who has special training plus a college education. At present there are 100,000 nurses in the United States, and yet there are not enough to take the places at the top. There are various branches of nursing: work in the wards of hospitals; in private homes; in anti-tuberculosis work; in nursing school—work in the modern department store and factory; rural work; work in the hospitals of Dr. Wilfred Grenfell; hospital social service; anti-tuberculosis work; and work as superintendent of a hospital. The chief qualifications for a nurse are reasonably good health, trustworthiness, and above all, love for the work. Miss Bissell closed by telling of the curriculum in the hospital during the period of training.

WHAT THEY DO.

Smith College students who have had experience or who are studying Hotel and Restaurant Work are invited to be instructors to a large number of Northampton school children desirous of having gardens this spring.

Pennsylvania now offers courses in Naval Training, consisting of lectures in navigation, seamanship, and gunnery.

University of Kansas is making every effort to prevent students leaving the Medical School before graduation. Misplaced patriotism must not interfere with the future supply of physicians.

College of Engineering, Denton, Texas, now offers practical instruction in gardening, poultry-keeping, raising of textiles, First Aid, and in working out recipes from cheaper foods which have the same nutritive value as higher-priced foods.

World wide problems to one a bit narrower in scope but is not by the smaller ones that we train ourselves for the greater emergencies, and is not our four years in college which give us this opportunity.

The problem that I speak of is that of the pledge slip and though I am speaking chiefly for that of the College Settlement Association I think I am fair in saying that the other associations have this same problem to face.

Is it fair, is it honorable, to give your word, your signature to the fulfillment of a statement and a few weeks later change your mind and throw all those "worse scrips of paper" into the waste bucket? Is our Alma Mater so worthless in our minds that we are going to leave her with such an opinion of us? Once and for all, let us look within ourselves and weigh the value of our word that we may in the future strive to raise its standard.

Miss Replier's talk, Madame Dupriex appealed to us for aid for the Belgian children. She made her plea the more graphic by giving us a short and vivid account of her own experiences when the German invasion forced the evacuation of her home.
OUR PREDECESSOR.

The editor of the Goucher Weekly, writing in answer to a letter requesting information as to the Goucher curriculum, plan upon which ours is based, says: "After all, such a plan does not materially help the government, but then again you may realize, as we do, that even though this is the case, you cannot show in any more material way that you would do more if you could."

The Goucher Pledge was accepted by the student body on April 20. In order to give more time for carrying out the provisions of the pledge, all unnecessary extra-curricular activities were abolished.

The students have also entered eagerly into the plans made by various departments for courses that will training useful during the war and thereafter.

The Social Service Department gives weekly lectures on topics of general interest to servicemen. The Mathematics Department offers a course in bookkeeping; the Botany Department gives instruction in practical gardening; the Physics Department will have a brief course in wireless telegraphy. Other departments are planning activities along their respective lines.

Inter-class activities and cherished amusements have been willingly renounced by the students. As a recent issue of the Goucher Weekly says editorially, "From now until the end of the year Goucher will be a place of more work and less expensive pleasure, but we shall have the satisfaction of knowing that we are doing our share and shall be happy in doing it."

The marriage of Alice C. Stanley, 1917, to Dean G. Acheson, Harvard Law, 1917, took place in Detroit on Saturday, May 5. Mr. and Mrs. Acheson are residing at Hotel Waban for the remainder of the college year.

1920's officers entertained the officers of their sister class at a delightfully informal supper party at the Inn, Tuesday evening, May 8.

The engagement of Dorothy F. Peterson, 1918, to Waldo H. Herrick, Davidson College, (O) 1913, was announced at a tea given by Mount Matheyes and Dorothy Greene at A. K. N. on Thursday afternoon, May 10.

Alice Showway, 1917, has announced her engagement to Theron H. Walker, Dartmouth '16.

Edith Dyatt, 1917, has announced her engagement to William Archibald, Jr., of New York.

The Senior officers gave a good old fashioned Pit Party for the Sophomore officers last Friday.

Members of the Class of 1916 in Wellesley and the vicinity entertained their honorary members, Mr. and Mrs. Greene, at a tea, on Friday afternoon, May 11 at Phi Sigma House.

The students in Physics 1 attended a required lecture last Wednesday on the subject of Wireless Telegraphy.

Society A. K. N. gave up its dance party over the week-end of May 13, and substituted a series of informal parties and walks.

Miss Kendall spoke to her History classes last Wednesday on "China and the Great War," pointing out China's particular relationship to the warring nations.

Tickets are $1.50 and will be on sale at the Elevator Table.

A CUP OF COCOA.

The Belgian child, if very fortunate, has had a bowl of soup and a few owners of brand imminet every day, week after week, week after month, for two years past. The child is lean, languid, feeble, stunted, sickly. A second meal, consisting of a cup of cocoa and a cracker, might be furnished if we would all help.

In the English Literature office, on the top of the big desk, is a treasure-box for Madame Dupriez - a box marked with the tricolor. A SPLENDID CONCERT.

In the hearts of those who heard the concert of the Wellesley College Symphony Orchestra, Friday evening, May 13, a feeling of pity rose for those who did not hear it. The Orchestra gives only one concert in the year, and that one is always well worth hearing.

Especially enjoyable was Friday's concert. The Mozart Symphony was beautiful, Godard's "Midnight," played by twenty-four violins produced a weird, wailing, but extremely pleasing effect, heightened by the tolling of the church clock. Caroline Brighin, 1918, is to be heartily congratulated on her brilliant rendering of the Chopin "Andante and Polonaise."

in the beaten path and was the first one of her class to reach chapel that morning. If the Senior class does not know its class song now, it is not from want of practice. It would be unsafe to venture a guess as to how many times they sang it through while Freshmen, Sophomores and Juniors marched under the Senior hoops and into Chapel.

The numbers this year were exceptionally impressive. When all of the white clad Sophomores were seated in their places on the hill below Tower Court where, as is customary, the sister class numbers were formed, the singing of the musical choir was made more effective by the accompaniment of a rhythmic waving of red, white, and blue, "1919's and everybody's colors." The loud applause and the cheers of the assembled college gave the stamp of approval to this second event of May Day.

THE CROWNING.

It may have rained Saturday afternoon and it may have seemed like winter, but still there is reliable evidence that it was May Day afternoon. One proof is the calendar; it said May 12, and the other, more unreliable source of evidence was inside the barn.

Farmers, baseball players and countless children assembled to watch the crowning of the May Queen and to eat ice cream cones. Charlotte Hesseltine, on escorted by several nudes, was crowned Queen of the May by the kingly Spellissy. One could not distinguish a senior from a freshman in such an unabridged and thoroughly enjoyable play, ground, but one could distinguish a Sophomore by a prim, fat, striped peppermint stick projecting from her childlike face, a gift from the generous 1920.

DAMPNESS.

Dampness in the spring
Many kinds you'll see,
Every single thing
Damp as damp can be.

Little drops of wet
Spoon (i) a call-out fine
Towards the gum you get
And pass the call-out time.

Study often will
Its share of dampness get
Can't spring fever kill
The best intentions yet?

The morning shower cold
Makes you jump and stamp
'Tis very good I'm told
And even that is damp!

Flowers don't complain
When moisture they can feel
They love the drizzling rain
And almost laugh and squeal.

My moral then is plain
"There is a silver lining."
So when again it starts to rain
No longer you'll be pining.

These lines suggested themselves to the author
When "little drops of water" forced her tennis racket and herself to shelter. Rain is disagreeable, but so also is that kind of dampness which you throw on your friends projects and plans. Therefore let them restrict all kinds of dampness. The only kind which will be tolerated is that concerning the Swimming Pool. We would welcome that additional moisture!

CONFERENCE OF THE INTERCOLLEGATE BUREAU OF OCCUPATIONS IN NEW YORK CITY, MARCH 30-31, 1917.

At an informal conference of representatives of College Appointment Bureaus and invited guests, Dr. Edward T. Devine, secretary of the Charity Organization Society of New York City made an interesting address from which only one point can now be taken, namely the possible chances open to college students of doing work under the Society during the summer. At this conference Professor Mills of Vassar spoke again regarding his view of the college course with reference to practice in social work. He mentioned some of the elements which true preparation for such work should contain: History, jurisprudence, psychology, biology and, not least, languages, since the languages and the nationality are so closely related. There was hardly time for a full discussion of the question of on which of us would perhaps feel that the last word had not been spoken even by Professor Mills.

MEMORIAL SERVICE FOR MRS. DURANT.

At Sunday evening services, the service was held in memory of Pauline A. Durant. Four addresses from those who had known Mrs. Durant personally, gave a very united and distinct idea of the splendid character of her, to whom, in a large part, we owe our college.

Mrs. Louise McCoy Nordin, who as a student, a member of the faculty and a trustee had been closely associated with Mrs. Durant, told us of her ardent and self-sacrificing service to the college, and of her concern for the smallest details that went for its growth. An example of this she told us that Mrs. Durant used to walk up and down immemorial steps before College Hall was built, so that she might find the easiest ones to put in the new building.

Mr. Alpheus Hardy, who succeeded Mrs. Durant as Treasurer, spoke from a business man's point of view of the "great and whole character" who always loyally and cheerfully gave in to the decision of the majority, no matter how much she might have felt her heart act on the plans that were being given up. He has found her a helpful co-worker and a sympathetic woman.

Next Miss Caroline Borden, from the beginning a friend of the family and of the college, told us of Mrs. Durant's outside interests, which embraced even China and Africa, and particularly of her work with the American Red Cross in Constantinople. This was one only of Mrs. Durant's many philanthropic interests.

Lastly, Miss Mary Haskell gave us the point of view of the undergraduate of the generation of 91, emphasizing Mrs. Durant's relation to the Student Aid Society of which she was founder and treasurer, and for which the girls especially admired and loved her.

THE DEATH OF MISS FOSDICK.

On Friday night, May eleventh, at Simpson Cottage occurred the death of Miss Nellie Fosdick, a graduate of Smith College and for the past four years, as a member of the Botany Faculty, one of Wellesley's most beloved instructors. Miss Fosdick has been in failing health for some months, but was present at her classes until within a few days of her death.

RELIGIOUS NOTES.

Miss Bates spoke on The Religious Message of Christina Rossetti at the Christian Association meeting at Billings Hall on Thursday evening, May 10.

The Village Christian Association meeting on Thursday evening, May 10, was led by Dorothy Bliss who chose for her subject, "As I Fight, Not as one that beats the air."

The class of 1918 held a prayer meeting at Phi Sigma on Sunday afternoon, May 19. Katherine Moller spoke upon the subject The Tool In Our Hands.

Bishop Lawrence, Bishop of Massachusetts and former President of Wellesley's board of trustees, spoke at Sunday morning chapel, May 14, on our mutual dependence upon one another. The strength and steadfastness of others in enduring experiences similar to ours, encourages us to be persevering. This interchange of strength is not only true of great bodies of people but also of individuals. To make our lives a source of help to others, Bishop Lawrence pointed out that it is not necessary to be in a prominent position. The simplest child may by his devotion to his highest duty inspire a great man, and the faith of the follower may be the inspiration of the leader.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, the Agora Society, realizing that in the death of Florence Brotherton, class of 1913, it has lost a valued member, it's

Resolved, That the Agora Society inscribe in its minutes a motion to express its sorrow in the death of Florence Brotherton, and its sympathy with her family in their loss.

That the Agora express its appreciation of the many services rendered by the Agora to ideals in her life, as shown by her chosen work.

That the Agora send a copy of these resolutions to the family of Florence Brotherton and to the Wellesley College News.

The Board of Directors of the Wellesley College Christian Association, realizing their great loss in the death of their friend and fellow-worker, Miss Fosdick, desire to express to her family and friends their appreciation of the noble life she lived among us, especially during these last months of suffering.

To all who knew her, she was a source of strength because of her ready sympathy and unerring interest in every activity which claimed her. But although we feel deeply the loss of a loyal and dear friend, we rejoice in her release from pain, knowing that her brave sweet influence will live on in the college she loved.

At the more formal meeting on Saturday afternoon, in the assembly hall of the Sage Foundation building, 130 East 22nd Street, Mr. Walter B. Pitkin of the Pulitzer School of Journalism had much stress on the opportunities offered in the management of country newspapers. He arranged opportunities for the novice in journalism in the following orders: (1) country weekly, (2) country daily, (3) small town daily, (4) and lowest in the school of opportunity the city daily.

He instanced several cases of young college men with journalistic ambitions who are getting fine returns from newspapers in small towns, saying that such work not only yields well financially, but places the country editor and publisher in a position of influence and opportunity.

Miss Pauline Goldmark on the Consumer's League, Miss Clara Porter of the New Edison Company, and Miss Catharine Davidson of the John Nemanier dry good system made interesting addresses on their respective fields.

A speaker welcomed to this conference with especially warmth was Miss Eugenia Wallace, of the Chicago Tribune, a native of New York City.

Miss Wallace spoke highly of the college members of her corps, and Wellesley took to herself no small part of this praise, as Ethel V. Z. Sullivan, 1905, Mildred C. Stone, 1914, and Mary Starr Wheeler, 1915, are all on her staff. Miss Wallace also made some excellent points regarding women as competitors with men in the banking field. One was that women under such circumstances should not ask for special favors. She emphasized also her preference for women students.

The student of high standing, she said, is likely to have industry and power of application and to have acquired a pride in her own work. If a student is satisfied with low grades in college, why should he aspire to do anything to be satisfied with a low standard of efficiency?

Here again there is a chance for difference of opinion, but one notes that Miss Wallace anticipates, no doubt unconsciously, Mr. Randolph Bourne in The New Republic of April 24th, "-

For any real effectiveness in the world, it is not enough to be habitual only seven cents per right.

Whenever you need to be literate, the world demands that you be actually literate. If you have information you are either useless or dangerous unless your information is accurate. It is better not to know any arithmetic at all than to make persistently seven hits out of ten."

Miss Emma F. Crandall, of the National Organization for Public Health Nursing, stressed the need of college graduates with the certificate of a Training School for Nurses also in administative and research positions in connection with hospitals and public sanitation.

The conference closed, but sectional enthusias carried one far down town to the Singer Build-

Sightly Luggage

Sightliness, strength, durability, economy of interior arrangement, those are the four features of good luggage.

Of trunks, wardrobe trunks particularly, we have a large assortment. The prices of many are lower than would be if we had done our wholesale shopping at the present market prices. We obtained various wardrobe trunks at special prices for our May sale, and persons who purchase now will receive the advantage of our purchases.

RESOLUTIONS FROM THE WELLESLEY CLUBS.

Worcester.

In view of the recent death of Mrs. Henry F. Durant, we, the Worcester Wellesley Club, would record the loyalty and gratitude which we, as graduates of Wellesley, hold for this generous founder of our college.

Exalted in purpose, majestic in character, her life and talents were ever devoted to the upbuilding of young women. The memory of her gracious presence in College Hall must ever be a blessing to older alumni, and her fine ideals and inspiration to all who enter the portals of Wellesley Colle.

Preparation.

With a feeling of deep sorrow because of the death of Mrs. Henry F. Durant, we, the Pittsbugh Wellesley Club, wish to put on record something of our keen sense of loss.

Remembering her gracious personality, unfailing generosity, and ready sympathy, we realize that Wellesley has lost one whose loyalty and devotion remained ever constant and faithful—yet not altogether lost because her ideals for our Alma Mater are still with us, and we continue to be an inspiration to those who in future years come to know and love the College Beautiful of which she and her husband were the beloved founders.

SOUTHEASTERN MASSACHUSETTS.

In the death of Mrs. Henry Fowle Durant all graduates of Wellesley feel that they have lost a true friend, who continued even to the end to hold the interests of the college close to her heart. She will always be an inspiration to those who knew her and to those who cherish the same high ideals.

Therefore, we, the members of the Wellesley Club of Southeastern Massachusetts, wish to place on our records our tribute of love and our appreciation of all she was in her loyal devotion to Wellesley.

Adele E. Apra, olve B. Barry, Ann L. Peck.

Hartford.

The Hartford Wellesley Club at its last meeting paid tribute to the gracious memory of Mrs. Durant whose life of rare service was so beautiful an illustration of the college motto—"Non ministrar, sed ministriare."

CLUBS.

CENTRAL CALIFORNIA.

The Central California Wellesley Club held its annual meeting at a luncheon at the Clift Hotel, San Francisco, on Saturday, April 11.

Dr. Lowenberg, formerly of the German and Philosophy departments at Wellesley and now of the University of California, addressed the meeting with an informal talk on his impressions of Wellesley, which were intimate and interesting. It is sometimes rather difficult for our club to get together, we live in the various cities and only twenty-two came to this luncheon.

We have a list of about seventy-five to whom notices were sent, so you can see what a small proportion actually meets.

We expect Miss Whiting on the 19th of May.
Clothes and the Woman

We are very glad to be able to offer to college women a great facility in making a choice by offering them the prettiest fashions from couturiers and manufacturers that one will find anywhere.

The New Spring Fashions are delightfully attractive--You'll enjoy seeing them.
