Will Wellesley Back Our Army In The Spring Offensive?

How American Women's Colleges Are Standing Behind Our Boys As They Go "Over The Top"

American Folk Music.

One of the most interesting lectures of the year was given Monday evening, February 18, by Mr. Charles S. Skilton, Professor of Music in the University of Kansas. Professor Skilton began his lecture with a short survey of European folk-music and its influence on various composers. Greig has based much of his work on Norwegian folk-themes; the Polish school founded by Chopin used them; the first theme of Tchaikovsky's famous Andante Cantabile from his String Quartette, Opus 11, is based on an air that he heard a cheerful carpenter singing.

In a new country, the first stage through which music passes is that of imitating the music of the old country. In the second stage, folk-music is utilized; the third is the independent artistic period. During the nineteenth century, American music stuck obstinately to imitation. Within the last twenty years, however, it has somewhat timidly entered on the second stage, so that at present we have a fair number of compositions based on Indian and negro music.

Purely American folk-music, according to Professor Skilton, falls into four classes. First, the religious folk-songs of New England, beginning with Puritan psalmody, largely transplanted from the Genevan psalter, and ending with Lowell Masson and his colleagues in the early nineteenth century; second, songs of the Civil War, of which only two—Dixie, a southern song composed by a northerner, and John Brown's Body, a northern song composed by a southerner—have had enduring interest. The origin of the tune of John Brown's Body is shadowed in mystery.

The third group, the ballads of Stephen Foster, is very widely known. These are not folk-tunes because they express the writer's tribute to the life about him, not his own life.

The desire to play and hear ragtime being an almost universal American trait, it cannot, in Professor Skilton's opinion, be too lightly passed over. Its rhythm is derived from negro music, but it carries syncopation to the point of monotony. To insist on hearing ragtime to the exclusion of all other music shows an undeveloped grade of musical intelligence.

The folk-music of the peoples not entirely assimilated is more interesting. Among the Creoles may be found satirical songs with a flavor of Gallic wit—songs that could ruin the career of a politician if sung behind his back. Negro (Continued on page 8, column 2)

Have You Done Your Best?

Look at the figures above! Are you particularly proud of Wellesley's standing? Why not? Because you have not done your best. That best is only a bit, Now is the time to work and put your college at the top. Remember that game does not jump together and make itself into a surgical dressing, nor will the cloth put itself through the sewing machine. Some one must make the dressing and run the machine. Come and work! Keep your eye on the Surgical Dressings clock and push it past the 10,000 mark long before the end of this semester. Start the new semester by giving not only your class hour but several more hours for War Relief work each week. We are counting on you to make this drive successful. The War Relief Organization feels that you will support it, not alone for its sake but because you owe it to yourself, to your college and to your country.

Dr. Fitch—1919's New Member.

The class of 1919 introduced Dr. Albert Parker Fitch as its honorary member at Chapel on Saturday morning, February 16. Dr. Fitch is no stranger to Wellesley. He has spoken here many times—at one evening service earlier this year. Dr. Fitch took his B.A. at Harvard in 1900, B.D. at Union Theological Seminary in 1903, D.D. at Amherst in 1909 and Williams in 1914. He was president of Andover Theological Seminary for a number of years, but is now at Amherst.

An informal reception was held for Dr. Fitch by the Junior class at T. Z. E. directly after Chapel on Saturday morning.

Birthday Party Transformed.

For the first time in the life of Student Government, its Birthday Party has become more of a time of celebration and inspiration for the improvement of Student Government itself. Like other youths it realizes that this year its celebration should have a world import and therefore the date of the Student Government Rally will be used for an All College Discussion of Wellesley's relation to the development of the world after the war.

Student Government Board.

Mr. Powers Gives Shakespearean Reading.

The second reading of the year under the auspices of the Department of Reading and Speaking was given by Mr. Leland Powers last Friday evening at Billings Hall. Mr. Powers gave for his first selection a slightly abridged version of Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

The interpretation of the character of Petruchio, the nas-tious husband who undertakes the successful management of Katherine's uncontrolled temper, was of special interest. Mr. Powers explained the psychology of Petruchio's method. He wishes to cure Katherine by showing her, in another person, how uncomfortable and distasteful her own characteristics may be. Thus he shows her, in himself, a picture of ungodly kind of female anger. But in all his dealings with her, Petruchio is careful to say nothing that she will have cause to regret afterwards; to do her no violence nor humiliation which can permanently wound her. Under the show of kindness and courtesy, he manages to prove to her the absurdity of her own actions, but he does not, as some interpreters have made him, do her any injury which she might remember to her unhappiness.

Mr. Powers' interpretation of the play was most interesting. He sought to show us how modern the comedy is, in reality; how very human and true in its relations to the daughters and husbands of today. Mr. Powers has a delightful informal way of making his situations vivid and clear; his keen sense of humor gives the characters a significance and feeling which is partly cynical, yet very real.

Mr. Powers gave for an encore a selection from Cyrano de Bergerac, in which Cyrano appears at the theatre, and fights a duel with an imposture nobleman to the accompaniment of an ex tempore ballad.

A Coming Recital.

Mme. Antoinette Sannowska, the distinguished Polish pianist, will give a recital at Billings Hall on Friday, March 15, at 8:30. The net proceeds to be handed over to our college war relief association. This is a great opportunity to hear this patriotic artist, who has by her personal effort raised over $200,000 for Poland. Tickets at fifty cents each are for sale at Room C, Billings Hall, or will be mailed upon application to Miss Hetty S. Wheeler.
III. Do You Believe in Signs?

Few people of the 20th century do! When reduced to the exigency of a daily sign by the hire of a paper or a magazine, one might almost wish her college-trained friends a bit more credulous and not so eager to investigate as they often prove. "Examine me just a minute, but can you change two nickels for a dime?" "I don't like to, but what do you get out of that philosophy assignment?" To the hard-pressed or floundering poet, such interludes lend no inspiration. Wellesley College is seldom afflicted with the epidemic of the daily sign. It is no question of whether we respect the plague on the rare occasions of its outbreak? Why drive your insane or to the Library, just because she doesn't support a watch-dog or an outer office with a secretary attached to ward off unceasing intrusions? If you are friend were not in, what would you do? Then act on your imagination!

IV. A Thought for 1919 About the Village

When I was a freshman a remark made by a junior, who was very evidently not going to sign up for the village, left a deep impression on my mind.

"Being a village senior," she said, "is sort of like going as a missionary. It is sacrificing the fun of being with your friends the last year of college for the sake of helping the freshmen."

I told this to Dr. King, and before I could laugh, and the idea has grown more ludicrous to me every day.

If you think Wellesley is the nicest place on earth to enjoy life to the fullest, if you hope you will always have friends and be in touch with all your important things in the subjects you are studying, if you are sure that Student Government, in its perfected form, is the best way to regulate your life at college and to learn to regulate your life elsewhere, then you are right. But be skeptical of your own ideas, and in the midst of the enthusiasm for the new order be ready to see the real conditions. Be true not only through your mind, but through your heart, and be skeptical of your own ideas.

If you think you are the only one who wants to make other people feel it too—then you want to be a Village Senior.

You arrive Saturday or Sunday night, the day before the houses are open to freshmen in the fall, and, after the first week, you and the other seniors sit down around your thirty, forty, or fifty names and later substitute nick-names, pilot them over campus, to South Naetic, and the movies, give them advice when they lose their cards of admission, teach them the gray look, urge them to attend all functions on campus, and to go to bed early (doing likewise yourself).

During the semester you strike the problem of translating your aim in coming to the village into everything that you do and hope that in some way the freshman, who are now as surely your friends as the other people up campus, will learn what you tried to learn perhaps a bit more quickly and easily for your being there.

Then come the days between vacation and mid-years, with exams threatening, examinations themselves, then grades. After these are over you sit down again for the rest of the year.

The story is often serious but is always made a story which has existed so successfully for so long a time as that of village seniors. But consideration of the advantages and disadvantages of a change can never lead to hasty decisions. The village in 1919 to you is the vehicle for change the next few months.

The sight is the second semester in the same way in the second semester that has raised the question: Is the village senior necessary or advisable in the village after spring vacation? Or, more definitely stated: Is it better or worse for the college community to let the freshmen govern themselves during the spring term?
I know the first argument that will come up.

Someone will say, "It is entirely a matter of the personal opinion of the senior. She can make herself necessary or not." Of course she can, just as any individual in the world can make herself necessary to the people around her—can make them dependent on her, but what of these dependents?

Let us first explain the idea. If it is not interfered with, and many improvements would have to be worked out. But in its embryo stage it is this. Suppose the junior, described at first, signs up to go to the village until spring and then concentrates her efforts in fulfilling her purpose during those months. At the end of that time she goes back to live on campus, virtually becoming a resident instead of a residing senior, but with the difference that she knows each of the girls and understands the difficulties of the district from having lived with them for two-thirds of the year. She is still decidedly in charge and will take a vital interest in it. In the village the best fitted freshman is appointed as house or district president, who does the mechanical work of the senior, looks after registration slips, appoints provosts, consults with the head of the house, attends House Presidents' Council, and, in general, represents Student Government to the district, and is responsible to Student Government for her district. She will work in close union with the senior who will come down at least once a week, perhaps to adjust the error cards or merely to talk over questions which cannot go on continually. This is the system barely outlined.

Now let us consider how it will affect the freshmen. Will it increase or decrease their support as citizens of Wellesley? I cannot see how it can decrease the influence and their loyalty to Student Government. They will realize that they too, are self-governing, as well as the upper classmen, since the actual execution of government will be directly in their own hands, instead of in the hands of the seniors. It will act as self-discipline, because they are responsible for themselves with no one to oversee their conduct. They will come in immediate contact with the other house presidents in the Council and will have a share and understanding of the importance of their work.

By spring, the senior will have done her work and, so far as possible, instilled into them at least the attitude which she herself maintains toward Student Government and toward Wellesley. It is probable that this is the right attitude. Now it only remains for us to convert the process by consciously and independently expressing this attitude for ourselves.

A social advantage lies in enlarging the point of contact between the freshmen and the campus. Knowing the surroundings, the freshmen will have to feel freer to come up to the campus houses, as they would not for strangers or chance acquaintances. In this way they would meet other and more of the upper classmen, in some measure widening the line between them.

There is still one other aspect of the situation. It is the important matter of deciding who will be sent to the village. The question of signing up presents itself to every junior and her decision is nearly always at least partially affected by her friends. Try as we may there is still a streak of personal interest left in us and the first objection is that raised by the junior who considered it a missionary proposition—that of a sacrifice. Although this may not be the ideal state of the union, it is a fact to be thought of. How many girls who would have been invaluable in the village have refrained from signing up for this reason? In order to avoid putting us into a place and to ask certain people to go to the village. The long and short of it is that many more and possibly better fitted girls would be anxious to undertake the opportunity and put their best into it, knowing that they would be called on for the work.

Of course, some serious objections can be raised, that of arranging rooms, choosing the freshman presidents of districts, etc., but intelligent effort can doubtless solve even these problems. Thus we should be particularly interested in plans that are being made for national reconstruction and continued peace.

In a recent article entitled Some Reconstruction Proposals, published in The Nation, January 3, 1918, Mr. Oswald L. Villard sets forth four definite proposals for reconstruction, stated clearly and concisely. The author, while admitting that these proposals are idealistic, maintains, nevertheless, that they are not impractical but essential for the felicity of the world.

The first proposal is for total disarmament of the nations—the abolition of a standing army, of compulsory military service, and of the manufacture of armaments. The second proposal is for the establishment of free trade and the nullification of protective tariffs, which, he claims, will end much enmity between nations. The third proposal, self-determination on the part of all nations that are capable of self-governing, if adopted, would carry us a long way toward the world-wide democracy for which we are striving. The final proposition is for an international parliament, which will provide for any dispute which might arise between nations.

It is interesting to note to what extent this plan for reconstruction has, in general, been supported by the nations. President Wilson carried out these ideas in his last address to Congress. Lloyd George touched on them in an address to the National Liberal Union. Yesterday, I was talking with Miss Villard, who expressed her hope that these principles may be carried into effect, and that we may see the realization of these dreams of international cooperation, so vital to the preservation of peace.
week were helped along this way, but the questions asked were in many cases so heterogeneous and the talk skipped so hastily from subject to subject that this, I thought, was necessary of course (the very nature of the case) that few gained as much as they had hoped in the way of completion understanding. Nothing can put us back again at the same point as before in our thinking—let us hope—but many would be glad of some means by which their own thought might be stimulated. This will be to know, if they are not already aware of it, that the library contains books which Dr. King used when he was making his speeches. This is one of the assets he touched upon in his sermon, and many others besides of vital interest to us all. His book The Greatness and Simplicity of the Christian Faith deals especially with our relations to the church. It contains much about friendship that should be of value to us. Others that should help us are all Fundamental Questions, The seeming Unreality of the Spiritual Life, and The Moral and Religious Challenge of Our Times. The latter treat of much of which Dr. King directly discussed during the week with us. There are chapters on Reverence for Personality, and Facing the Facts of Life that are sure to interest us, for our very manners and the power of conviction of those, then, who really wish to make the most of this new enlightenment which has come to us, have recourse to the library and prepare themselves more adequately for the work that responsibility which Dr. King has made clear to us.

VIII.

What is the matter with you? Have you forgotten that you are in college and are not boarding-school girls any longer? Do you realize that eleven-tenths of the girls going to the Saturday night Olds concert are freshmen? It seems unfair, that we, the most insignificant people in college— for we are, in everyone's eyes except our own—should be the ones to fill the hall, when seniors and juniors are deprived of the pleasure, are lily our presence. And it seems not only unfair but unjust for us to presume to criticise the way the whole situation has been handled. It hurts to hear on every side "not only are we freshmen going but the juniors and in the more competent platitude than his." This year when seniors and juniors have given up their Prom and Hop, we freshmen should consider it a great privilege to be given the same opportunity to secure tickets as the upper classmen. What's done is done, however, the tickets are bought and the fuss is made. The only way to make amends is by our behaviour Saturday night. Let's not rush for front seats and consider ourselves the superior force just because of the superior number. Remember we are freshmen.

WOMEN IN WAR WORK.

Interesting tales come to us of women in war work, women who have proved themselves so valuable that they have been assigned or positions hitherto held by men.

An interesting case is that of Miss Sue Dorsey, who entered the Navy Department as a civil service stenographer, and is now USWN, for an officer's commission in the navy. "If anyone deserves a commission, she does," said Admiral McGowan, paymaster general of the United States Navy, characterizing her as "the most valuable woman in the service." Miss Dorsey is the only woman USWN now in the service.

A. Hayden, known officially as executive clerk of the priorities section, is a certain Ann Hay- den, twenty-two years of age, who recently enlisted in the army for the cause in command" she takes charge of the section in the absence of the head, just as formerly, when working for a construction firm in Washington, she would in the absence of the head of the firm, superintend the construction of buildings.

Case after case of women who have "made good" and taken a "man's job." Admiral McGowan says of the 222 women who are now employed in the Bureau of Accounts and Supplies in the navy department in place of the twenty-five so employed before the war, "They're doing yeoman's work and they're yeomen. The war efficiency of the navy department is due, in a big part, to the women employed in it. The women who have taken these positions have shown themselves as efficient as men."

Civil service examinations for positions to which women are now eligible are, mechanical drafting, telephone operator, express rate clerk, and assistant examiner in the patent office.

Still more wide-spread and national movements are going on among women war workers. Under the Ordinance Department of the Army, women supervisors will be stationed in every district where women are employed in munition plants. They will maintain for these women proper working and housing conditions and prevent exploitation, with wholesale censure and contempt.

Then, too, a plan has been originated for intensive training in practical kitchen economy to reach each of the 31,000,000 families in America. In Washington, the women of the Army Base Kitchen is designed to serve as a model for the entire country, a few church women organised into a cooking class under a domestic science expert from the Department of Agriculture. Then each week is asked to make a short church organisation and community and teach war economy cooking, and wherever possible to persuade all the women in her class to form other classes, thus forming an endless chain of classes.

Under the Educational Propagation Department of the Council of National Defense, women speakers are being organised in each state to bring the message of war necessity before large meetings and to follow them up with effective campaigns in the smaller communities. Up to January 15, twenty-five states had reported the existence of Speakers' Bureaus and others planned such organisations.

Whether men workers or women of leisure, we see women war workers all over the country, responding to the call of war necessity and economy and spreading the call through every community.

THE OLD KIT BAG.

Editor's Notes—This column is to consist of letters received from abroad. Help the editor by sending in any parts of your letters which you consider interesting enough to print. Contributions should be addressed to the Editor of the Old Kit Bag, and sent to the News Office, Chapel Basement, or handed to one of the News editors.

The following are extracts from letters of two Y. M. C. A. Secretaries in service:

Exeterior Hotel, Nancy.

March 29, 1917.

From America's farthest front we have come right into the French lines looking for stoves, tables, benches, lights and other comforts for our boys. It has been a long ride on the trucks and through the arduous roads of France—tough, instead of stopping through the mud and rolling up in dumpy blankets, although much nearer civilisation than in the majority of tents, I should sleep in honest to goodness beds with white sheets and a pillow, my! but have I learned to appreciate "home" before.

And there is actuality here! God's own earth! It makes the straw and the blankets look a long way off! Yet nearer 24 hours and I will be at home on the grounds again. Such is our life, and I wouldn't be anywhere but out here in the mud for anything I know of.

Now I know why the bed-ridden wounded and the forlorned long for the trenches. It's a madness one catches."

At present my work is at headquarters of the 2nd Division following a sick leave due to camp infection and a transfer from the base. In a day or so I expect to begin pioneering the new places, opening points which have never been in occupied before, from Foch to Thirring. Making successions, and moving on to the next locality, sudden little village, raising up my plant, starting something for the boys and then—on again. It's life and pioneering is my game.

I am writing this from the little dugout which has been my home for several days, and probably will be for many more. The dugout is six by three feet in size, with a hole for a full set of kit bags, and by stretching out full length my head and toes touch each end of my cot. I can't stand up in it, as you may guess, but must always assume a sitting posture. Although the ordinary dugout is simply a hole in the ground with some sort of covering over the top, this one is different and far better, as it was built for my predecessor, who has gone to the hospital with rheumatic fever and dysentery.

Well, at last, I am up in the thick of things and it seems good, for I feel more as though I were "doing my bit" when I am exposed to the same conditions as many of the men. Sue was sent home by reason of bad health, and while there were fine opportunities there, it was not soldiering because the hardships were nil. Here we are "one of the men," so to speak—under the same hardships and dangers, if you can call them that.

I made the first stage of my journey to Kanata with another secretary who is in charge of the base but there. As the "Palestine Limited" (this palatial train being more like one of our freight trains,) from Paddington, making an average of some ten or twelve miles an hour, did not leave until six in the evening, it was necessary to spend most of the day in Kanata. But this was easily done with the help of a couple of good books in my haystack and a couple of good meals in my "tummy."

Going across to the station at six, I found the truck for officers completely packed, so I took the next best thing—the truck for officers' luggage. This was full of kit bags, boxes, and crates of entailing, including a case of young puddings, who awakened us very early next morning with their cackling, but who were too much shaken up to deposit any eggs for our breakfast. As there was no mention of food in the orders, and being unable to ride on and there was room of it, was not so bad. There were several Tommies and some Jacks in the truck, most of whom were officers' servants in charge of their particular patron's luggage, and it was not long before the ice was broken and we had a congenial little group.

COLLEGE NOTES.

(The column is confined to personal items concerning students, faculty, and others on our campus or closely connected herewith, and will be of especial interest to the Editor at the News Office, Chapel basement, and may be sent in on the News Office on the New Bulletin before 9:30 a. m. Monday.)

The engagement of Adelaide Stickney, '15, to H. Homer Ayer Johnson, of Chicago, Ill, is announced.

Members of the elective classes in mathematics spent a pleasant evening Tuesday, Feb. 12, in the science room of the library, making the acquaintance of some of our rare and curious old mathematical books, shown by one of the students who were on exhibit ranging from sixteenth and seventeenth century vellum and leather bound editions of the Greek mathematicians to David Eugene Smith's Rare Arkhimedes, a large edition, belonging to the Plimpton Collection. It is hoped that some account of the most valuable of these books may appear soon in the News.)
Up at campus, down in all,
Their sweet tooth they needs must fill.
As they eat their sugar treat,
Think they of the babies they cheat?

In their rooms, and everywhere,
Wool and needles will be there.
As the Red Cross gauze they feed,
Think they of the wounds they heal?

FROM THE VALENTINE PARTY.

Rare!
Shall I compare thee to a summer’s day?
That’s far too trite, Bill Shakespeare wrote it first.
My pearl, or diamond, ruby, or my dove
For love of whom my very heart will burst?
Ah, no! you are too priceless to my soul,
I'll call thee now my precious lump of coal.

To a MATH. MAJOR.
If you would multiply my joys,
And add your life to mine,
’Twould subtract every care from me,
So give me but a sine.
But if you will not make two one
And at a tangent fly,
I’ll go and sit upon a log,
And just eat humble pie.

SPRING HAS COME.

Some tell the spring by bane of green
Upon the hills,
Some tell it in the golden flash
Of daffodils.
For me, I count her joyous coming
By none of that,
I tell, above a furry coat, her earliest message—
A new straw hat!

THE UPS AND DOWNS OF COLLEGE LIFE.

I go up late each morning
And hurry down to smooth sheets.
And when I’ve finished breakfast
At eight-fifteen, quite promptly
Down the hill to leave the race
And slide into the chapel
And I eat, then, how I rush about,
I trip down to Zoo,
I stop and glance back,
And I find I’ve lost my dogfish home.

When evening comes I am a wreck
I fling myself like dead But
Upon the couch, and hope to die

Nothing offers to women an opportunity for patriotic service, a splendid preparation for life and a profession of broad social mission more than the School of Nursing. Accordingly, the College has given a three-years' course in Nursing. Theoretical instruction is given in the College, and practical instruction in the wards of the Boston and St. Louis Children's Hospitals, Washington University Dispensary and Social Service Department. The College is offered to applicants having an A.B. or B.S. degree from this college. The president and the staff reserve a few of the salient points made by President King.

L.

President King opened his Discussion Week on Monday afternoon with the subject, Reverence for Personality. Man's helpless infancy and his dependence upon personal relations throughout his whole life, indicate that personal respect is the basic element of human society. A man's only real possession is his character; that potential gift to mankind, and therefore he should seek its highest development. This is the essence of the individual for the God-given possibilities within himself, avoiding self-depreciation of any extreme and vainglory on the other, but maintaining, instead, a steady self-confidence. The inviolability of the human soul demands that a man reverence the individuality of others as he does his own. No intimacy should go so far as to destroy the all-important rights of others, for intrusion, officiousness, and domination destroy every possibility of real friendship. In family relationships, a consciousness of the worth of every human being should promote delicacy and mutual consideration. The wise father is the one who teaches his child to choose for itself, matter what it may cost him; that is God's ‘bol' with us. One of the most beautiful pieces of evidence of Jesus is suggested by the words of the Proverb, I stand at the door and knock.' Even He would not force an unwilling entrance to the inner sanctuary of any human heart.

II.

In the second week of the service of the week, President King dealt with the prevalent query, Have God Forgotten the World? He showed that the prevalent plea is not to any lack in God, but rather to man's failure to comprehend and fulfill the laws of the sphere in which they dwell. The attainment of a normal world involves the recognition of moral laws, and these must be obeyed by nations as well as individuals. No one who sees the terrible results of self-seeking in this War, can think that any form of selfishness is negligible. The wretched spectacle of death and suffering in the present strife, has shaken the faith of many. The question of numbers, however, does not really modify the world-old problem of death, since the experience itself is manifestly unchanged. The suffering of today which is primarily humanitarian, is its own justification; for to what end should a man live, if there be not greater end for which to die? Even in face of the present horrors, we can feel outside of ourselves a force at work for righteousness, and this force we may feel to be the hand of God.

III.

On Wednesday afternoon President King pointed out some of the great immovable facts of life which must be faced in the upbuilding of character. The physical form of an individual should be subject to his mind, that is, not suppressed, but controlled for the highest form of self-expression. Convictions and ideals are necessary to growth; no period of inspiration is worthwhile unless it touches life and makes for high decision. For the fulfillment of his ideals man has been given the faithful gift of will, which, when used aright, becomes ever steadier with development. The subject of character-formation must be viewed objectively by the individual, as well as subjectively, on account of the force of personal magnetism; for, although a man cannot check his personal influence, he may choose to a certain extent to exert it.

From the above facts we assume the following: that the supreme interests in life are those of character, which springs not out of vanity, but grows from conviction, ideals, and hopes; that the highest development of man is, that of convictions, ideals, and hope; and that these cannot be attained mechanically or passively, but demand a generous amount of time and fearless, thorough-going thought on the part of the individual.

IV.

On Thursday, President King set forth the Supreme Claims of Christianity upon the Thoughtful. The thinking man is the one who wrestles with ideas until he perceives their true proportions. Christianity stands foursquare to facts, and calls man to the full joy of living, because it is based upon the greatest condition there is,—the love of God for man. As we have seen, life is to be measured by great convictions. Man's relation to God is the single relationship which gives reality to all the others. Of all the facts of life personalities are the most significant, and of these the historic Jesus commands our chief attention, for his characteristics may be transferred by one to man's conception of God, and Jesus life furnishes the conditions for ideal living through friendship and work in that it offers the high hope of endless growth through deepening acquaintance with God.

V.

The Grounds of Hope to the Changing World Order was the theme of President King's last afternoon address. The struggle of which we find ourselves a part, is the result of the modern German philosophy of the state and of the destructive use of scientific forces. War now is therefore necessary to the preservation of decent and Christian civilization. It is the struggle of civilization on the march to save civilization from savagery. The present brutality must, however, mean a corresponding advance in the future, for it is unthinkable that such men-made sacrifices should be asked. Superstitions, control of necessities and cooperative militarism among the Allies have forced upon the nations a gigantic experiment in internationalism which may be the basis of world democracy when peace comes. The Christian mind has come through this War unscathed. Only those who will live out its principles, may become citizens fit to lay the foundation of a new civilization. President King closed his address with the following challenge:

LAW STUDENTS

THE BOSTON UNIVERSITY LAW SCHOOL gives the student such training in the principles of the law and such equipment in the technique of the profession as will best prepare him for active practice wherever the English system of law prevails. Course for LL.B. requires 3 school years. Those who have received this degree from this or any other approved school of law may receive L.L.M. on the completion of one year's resident attendance under the direction of Dr. Melville M. Bigelow. Special scholarships ($50 per year) are awarded to college graduates. For catalog, address Homer Albers, Dean 11 Ashburton Place, Boston

“Your soul in the midst of stirring and fertile days,—days great in possibilities for both good and evil, days that may vitally affect your own personal interests and may even cost life, and yet days which forbid you to think simply of yourself.

In days like these you will need every resource that your college life has opened to you—willingness to face the facts, clearness of vision, discernment of the laws of life and obedience to them, depth of conviction, upholding ideals and hopes, steady dedication to God's purposes for humanity.

“For you come into a world order, plastic to men's molding as never before and in which tremen- dous forces are at work—threatening hostile forces which you must help to check and conquer; battling ambivalent forces which you must help to harness to great constructive and humane ends; positively helpful forces in which you may rejoice, and which you must help to make more powerful and controlling.

“I would not disguise from you, if I could, the critical significance and terrible cost of the years that lie ahead. And yet I would not face them with mighty hope in your hearts. For you will belong to a generation which will be challenged—no preceding generation has ever been—to think in world terms, to feel with all humanity, and to cherish world purposes. It will be no time for intellectual slovenliness, no time for smallness and pettiness of spirit, no time for narrow selfishness, no time for littleness of faith. The very greatness of the demands upon it to insure that your generation will have more men and women of largeness of life than any other age has seen. May you—every one—in their ranks.

Keep clear of the issues of this world-war in their largeness and significance. Believe and hope in the great on-going purposes of God for a new world. Work intelligently and unselfishly with God for the accomplishment of those world purposes. MORNING CHAPEL.

President King’s farewell address was given on Sunday morning, February 17, on the subject, Christianity as a Challenge of the Present World Situation. At the close of the regular service President King administered Communion.

THE INTERCOLLEGIATE INTELLIGENCE BUREAU IN 1918.

Since February, 1917, nearly one hundred and fifty colleges, technical schools and universities organized as the Intercollegiate Intelligence Bureau have been giving special aid to the country in its greatest crisis. Brought into existence almost at the direct request of the Secretaries of War and the Navy, the Bureau has been warmly received and greatly used by Government Departments. About four thousand men of specialized training have been placed at important war and military work on the request of Government Officers for men having a variety of training and experience. In a number of cases the Bureau served when other sources had failed. The method used was to have an adjutant and committee appointed at each educational institution which would organize as a co-operative unit of the Bureau, through officers and men; the adjutants kept on file accurate and adequate information of students and alumni so that the calls from the Washington Office of the Bureau could be answered, by sending names of men who were fit and ready to serve the Government. Success has been brought by the adjutants. Those institutions which have helped most, and in turn have been strengthened most, have their adjutants to thank. The extensive work of the Washington Office was made possible, by devoted young volunteers from a dozen colleges, who gave their time and expenses while carrying the Bureau into Government Departments. After a while, city committees of college men were organized, because of the large number of desirable and available men in the cities.

If there were space it would be interesting to describe in detail some of our adventures; the strenuous days of the draft; how in response to a hasty call on Friday, we had men on the dock on Monday, ready to sail; how, when a call was cancelled,—impatiently and urgently made the day before,—we had to be sorry that a dozen men were on the cars and could not be stopped. No prompt had been the response of our adjutants.

The past is encouraging but the future is larger and broader. Calls from the Government,—very important ones,—continue to come in and this primary work will go on. Industrial and commercial establishments are calling for help and their necessities are hardly secondary to those of the Government. Colleges and universities want more and more specialized information about Government departments and their activities. College presidents and other officers ask us to attend to small tasks in Washington. A month ago several persons said, "how about helping the boys get back into business when they come home?" "Why does not the Bureau undertake this?" The adjutants have been made with the American University Union of Europe to do this great task jointly. The Union offices in Europe will be those of the Bureau and the Bureau offices here will be those of the Union. The Union will register all men who are about to come home, as much in advance as possible, and will send their qualifications, and desires for the future, to the Bureau here, which will try to have a place for them when they arrive. The Bureau will be ready to steer those who have been severely injured and may have to adopt new activities. The men will come back to a different country from the one they left, and it will be the work of the Bureau to make them acquainted with the new conditions and help them to get a good and prompt start at rebuilding.

Some time ago it was suggested by prominent college men that the Bureau should look forward to a permanent existence as the coordinating organization for all college employment bureaus. This may be expected, but can be given only a passing thought at present.

For all this activity a larger organization has been planned. The Executive Committee has been increased to give a broader representation and future support.

Miss Louise Sheppard of Yassar comes to the Washington Office to organize an adequate response to the demand for college women which is increasing in extent and importance.

A division of Information will supply special information which may be asked for by college officers. It will mail a weekly letter which will put college officers everywhere in close and immediate contact with whatever development has occurred which would seem of importance in the planning of college activities during and after the war.

A larger Division of Service Calls will keep a close relation with the personnel needs of Government Departments, and of private business serving the Government, and transmit them to the adjutant.

A Division of Records and Organization will serve the adjutants in the colleges and cities so as to make their work more effective. It will also plan to follow up all recommendations, recording, and reporting to the adjutant, acceptances and rejections.

The two latter divisions will jointly handle the cases of returning college students and attend to other business, from the American University Union in Europe. To assist this work plans are under way to have a New York Office of call for the convenience of the men when they land.

Money is necessary and there is no hesitancy in asking for it. The work is for the Government, for the colleges and for college men. The men who have offered themselves for their country have a right to expect help in making up for the time lost, by getting re-established in industry at the earliest possible moment. The budget of the Bureau, in addition to a large amount of volunteer help, is $2,000 per month.

Any college, university or technical school may become a member of the Bureau by paying $50, $100, or $250, each institution deciding for itself which of the three amounts is proper. The money may be paid directly by the institution or by some of its friends, but can be received only with the consent of its president.

In addition to the membership fee, trustees, groups of alumni, or individual alumni, are asked to undertake the raising of funds somewhat proportionate in size to their alumnus population and wealth. Several alumni groups of large univer-

American Folk Music.

music in general is an important branch of American music, though its American elements cannot be definitely separated from its African elements. The negro spiritual express the deeply religious, rather superstitious, spirit of the negro. They have influenced such composers as Coleridge, Taylor, Chadwick and Dvorak. The cowboys are responsible for no really original music, their songs being for the most part set to other people's melodies. They have originated only cattle-calls, and lullabies to keep the herds still at night. Among the Kentucky mountaineers may be found ballads from the English as old as the time of Queen Elizabeth, but little or no original music.

Attention has only lately been directed to Indian music, which is peculiar to America. Among the Indians, music serves primarily the purpose of worship, being used only to a limited degree in social life. Indian songs are fashioned differently from ours. The Indian refrains from singing until he has arrived at a wild pitch of excitement. Then he begins with a loud, high yell, at the climax of his song. Not having a good voice, for few Indians have, he is forced to start leaping down the scale generally by intervals of a fourth, sometimes of a third, ending his performance with a species of sob on the lowest note.

Professor Skilton sang several Indian songs, accompanying himself on an East Indian cracker box, his tin-tom having been delayed in the mails. The Cheyenne War Song was porticoically stimulating. The Deer Dance of the Hoopa River Indians was also interesting in that the voice sings in 3-4 time while the drum is beaten in 3-4 time.

In summaizing, Professor Skilton pointed out that no very great music can be developed from what little folk-music we have because it is heterogeneous, scattered, limited in quality, and does not express the life of America as a whole.

Professor Skilton illustrated many of his points at the piano, playing such artistic compositions as have been developed from the themes of American folk-songs.

RECAPITULATION

Under the auspices of the Department of Music members of the college enjoyed an organ recital on Tuesday, February 18, by the visiting Professor from the University of Kansas. Mr. Skilton's interesting program was as follows:

Legend of the Organ Builder

Skilton

(After the poem by Julius C. R. Dorr)

"An organ that magically played itself at the weddings of true lovers, remained silent at the marriage of its builder. He, not understanding that his vanity was the cause, accused his bride, and angrily left her. Years later, returning repentant, he found her dead. As he walked beside her bier down the aisle, the organ played a strain of unearthly sweetness, knowing itself forgiv'n he fell dead. The organ softly sunk to silence, and silence kept forevermore."

DEATHS.

12. On February 11, in Medford, Mass., Ralph E. McMillin, the brother of Helen F. McMillin.

The class of '79 has received with sadness the message from India that the beautiful life of a dearly loved classmate, Gertrude Chandler Wyckoff, has ended. To most of the class the earliest recollection of their college days is of the fine, strong, joyous girl, whose leadership they delighted to follow, both in the byways of merriment and in the paths of self-help and service. She illustrated to them the strength and beauty of a life gladly given to the service of Christ in the foreign field, and the thirty-seven brave, bright years spent in India have filled up the full measure of her devotion. Her name the class now enrolls with tender affection among those held in sacred remembrance,—Mollie Bingham, Evelyn Hall, Annie Montague, Gertrude Chittister Wyckoff; loved and pleasant in their lives, they have passed through Glory's morning gate and entered the Land of the Fullness of Joy.

For the Class of '79,

LOUISE M. NORTH, Secretary.

THE WELLESLEY RELIEF UNIT.

The plans for the Unit have developed rapidly within the past week. As the News has already reported, the Unit has been definitely enrolled under the Red Cross; and the indications are that the members will be assigned to work among the repatriates—600 of whom are returning daily to France. No work could present a greater challenge to the resourcefulness of college women.

The date of sailing cannot of course, be set definitely, but the Red Cross is eager to make it as early as possible; and it is expected that the Unit will report itself prepared to go early in April.

The personnel of the Unit will be published as soon as possible. At present it is incomplete because of the importance of securing in it a proper "balance"; i.e., a group of workers best meeting the needs as understood from the latest information from France.

Mrs. Doro Emerson Wheeler, '92, and Miss Helen M. Kelsey, '98, have been made members of the War Service Committee and Miss Kelsey has been given charge of the correspondence with applicants.

NEWS FROM OTHER COLLEGES.

Vassar.

On Tuesday evening, February 12, Main Hall caught fire. The configuration started in the servants' quarters and burnt part of the kitchen but was put out before much damage was done to the dining room or the rest of the building. The loss is valued at about $30,000. Owing to the damage done, meals in Main Hall are served in relays, and the servants are for the time being housed in the gymnasium.

SMITH.

A course in cookery and food essentials will be given and will enable those who successfully complete it to do summer work under the Food Administration. There will be two lectures a week and two hours of laboratory a month. In June this study will be followed by a short period of intensive work at the Massachusetts Agricultural College. The course is open to juniors and seniors who have had one year of chemistry.

The Smith Unit has been taken over by the American Red Cross, because in the future only government supplies will be transported.

HOLLIS STREET THEATRE.

At the Hollis Street Theatre, George Arliss and his supporting company will begin an engagement Monday, February 18, in the new play, Hamilton, which has won great favor this season in New York, Philadelphia and Chicago. The drama is by Mrs. Mary P. Hamlin and Mr. Arliss himself, and it is declared by the majority of critics to be superior, in dramatic interest and in characterization to Durruti, which has stood up to the present time as Mr. Arliss' most successful vehicle.

The play deals with the earlier career of Alexander Hamilton and his struggles in support of the first administration, but is by no means, dry history. The romantic interest of the present play centers upon his intrigue with the beautiful Mrs. Reynolds, who attempted, at the instigation of Hamilton's political enemies, to lure him to social destruction. This episode, as well as all other episodes and characters in the play, is historically accurate. The scenes of the play are laid in Hamilton's house and in the Old Exchange Coffee House in Philadelphia, in the year 1791, and among the notable personages introduced are Thomas Jefferson, James Monroe, General Schuyler, Count Talleyrand, William Giles, Belay Hamilton and her sister, the out-spoken Angelica Church.

Mr. Arliss appears under the direction of Kibb and Ensignger and George C. Tyler and is surrounded by a company including Miss Janea Eagles, Mrs. Arliss, Marion Barney, Katherine Hayden, Harrie Kirkland, Carl Anthony, George Woodward, John Ravalid, James O. Barrows, Guy Forester, Wilson Day and Dudley Digges,—Adv.(

Whitmarsh, Bess, '18.

Any student who applied for the first squad as housekeeper or farm hand, and whose name does not appear on the above list will be considered for the second or third squads if she so desires. This desire should be expressed in writing to Miss Mabel A. Stone not later than March 2.

MARGARET C. FERGUSON, Foreman of the Wellesley College War Farm.

A CALL FOR HELP.

The undersigned has been asked to discuss at a meeting of mathematics teachers the question Why Students Fail in Mathematics. It would be a great advantage if the question might be treated from the standpoint not of the teacher only, but of the student as well. Any offer of thought or fact will be welcome from those who know what a hard struggle the subject means in their own experience or through their friends. No names will be quoted, and it is hoped that many very frank and honest replies to this call for help may be received from undergraduates, alumni, former students, teachers in preparatory schools—all who can give the assistance desired. The number of replies received may make the personal acknowledgment of all impossible, but the News will bear a message of gratitude.

HELEN A. MERRILL.

TREE DAY COSTUMES.

Will everyone having any costumes or properties belonging to the Tree Day room, such as the May Day costumes worn last spring, etc., please return them as soon as possible to Ruth J. Hastings, Stone Hall? This will make possible the utilization of the old material and place the costumes where the members of the college may obtain them when needed.

DOROTHY LONG STEEN.

APROPOS?

"Sir, I have great doubts About this world, doubts if we have the right To sit down here for this terrestrial feast And gorge ourselves with plenty, when we know That for the scraps and crumbs which we let fall And never miss, children will kiss our hands And women weep in gratitude."

—Alfred Noyes: Sheen, Act 1, Scene 1.

AN ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

The Music Department wishes to acknowledge gratefully the receipt of a check for twenty-five dollars from Miss Jessie Buchanan, to be spent in the purchase of musical works for the library. Miss Buchanan was a special student at the college during the years 1903-1907, and is now instructor in music at the State College for Women, Tallahassee, Florida. This is the third annual gift of a similar amount which she has made to the department and which has added needed material to its library.

SUFFRAGE ATTAINMENTS.

Woman for British Cabinet.

A woman cabinet minister for England is one of the possibilities of the near future. Wide support has been given to the proposal that a woman should occupy the office of Minister of Health, which is to be added to the British cabinet immediately after the war. The Minister of Health will need to be inspector, guardian, councillor, expert on food values, doctor, nurse, cook and sanitary expert. All these are specifically within women’s experience. Truly the vote has opened new opportunities for women’s service in England.

War Service Unity.

The Massachusetts Woman Suffrage Association has organized a War Service Committee that will begin at the beginning by looking after gardening, food production and then its conservation. Welfare work and every form of patriotic service so ably rendered by the suffrage leagues in the past year throughout Massachusetts will be coordinated that there may be no waste effort. Mrs. Benjamin P. Pittman of Boston is chairman of the War Service Committee.

GERMAN WAR PRACTICE

 Destruction of the Library of the University of Louvain

From an article in the London Times of November 4, 1919, by M. E. Durham, quoting Professor Leon Van der Essen, who had recently seen the librarian, Professor Delanoy, who went to the spot August 27, 1914, to see whether anything could be saved:

"The Germans did not penetrate the building, but contented themselves with smashing the main window looking on the Vieux Marché. Through that window they introduced some inflammable liquid and fired a few shots, causing an immediate explosion.

"On the night of Tuesday, the 24th, a father of the Josephite College, which is located a few yards from the spot where the Germans smashed the main window, called the attention of the commanding officer to the fact that the building he was going to destroy was the University Library. The officer replied, textually, 'It is nobody's.' [It is the order.] It was then 11 p.m. These are the facts."

That our own Universities and Libraries have not suffered the fate of Louvain is due to the unbroken line of our Allies. To secure to all peoples, great and small, self-government and the peaceful use of learning, the United States is at war.
