ROLL THE CLOUDS OF WAR AWAY!
SATURDAY, MAY 4.

If life is worth living, isn't it worth saving? That Bandage you make Saturday afternoon may save the life of your brother or fiancé. Can you afford NOT to make it? Every single dressing made Saturday afternoon will bring some relief to a suffering soldier. What if the boys in France thought they needed Saturday afternoons for recreation? Can we spare them just ONE? Do you want to make future May Days possible? Then make dressings cheerfully this time.

War is horrible. Help provide material for its only hopeful feature—mercy to the wounded.

SENIOR RED CROSS DRIVE.

The Senior Red Cross Drive last Saturday afternoon was an undoubted success, as the results of 3650 surgical dressings plainly show. There were from one to two hundred seniors working all the afternoon, not only in Shakespeare but in the guest-dining room at Tower Court and in Bertie. 1918 discovered that making surgical dressings was not the hard work some of them had thought it, and anyone who heard them tonelessly singing songs of seven years ago must have believed they were having a splendid time.

1921 FLIES RED CROSS FLAG.

1921 managed a very effective bicycle parade on last Friday morning; but their banner was so taken up with announcing their Liberty Bond that a most important event was not mentioned. For the idea of a surgical dressings room in the village had been inaugurated the day before.

Not content with Agora because of its distance from freshman houses, the class decided to rent a room, situated across from the Inn, and equip it for surgical dressings. Its opening is to be a feature of the May Day Drive.

The Red Cross flag over the door will not mark anything exclusively for the freshmen. The room is stationed there for the use of the entire college. Moreover it will be opened early next fall, so that 1922 during the first week may grow accustomed to using it. After a month or two, it is planned that 1922 take charge of it.

Help make it a success! Upperclassmen, come in whenever you are in the "vill": Freshmen, come as often as possible. It will be open from 10:30 till 8.

Don't be slackers!

A WILLIAMS COLLEGE LECTURER ON ORIENTAL PHILOSOPHY.

By invitation of the departments of Biblical History and Philosophy, Professor James Bissett Pratt of Williams College will lecture, Tuesday, May 7, at 8 o'clock, in the Administration Building on The Vedanta Philosophy. Professor Pratt is an uncommonly clear thinker and a lucid speaker. He has recently spent a fruitful year in India and his dissertation, a study of the country of the Upanishads, illuminates his study of their doctrine. A general invitation to the lecture is very cordially extended.

THE PROBLEM OF THE NEAR EAST.

Dr. James L. Burton gave a very interesting talk on the Eastern question and its relation to the present war in evening chapel, Sunday, April 28. Mohammedanism, in its various political and religious aspects, was a weighty factor in Germany's plan to open a way to the Persian Gulf. However, as far as the Par East is concerned, Germany has been a failure; and because of the war the Mohammedans have been split in two sections, thereby preventing a unified "Holy War" which has been so long dreaded.
CAMPUS TO VILLAGE.

At Wellesley the problem of compact assimilation of new students is particularly keen. The outstanding reason for this is the purely mechanical one of room. At present there is no room on campus for all members of the college. It is probably the least of four evils to have the freshmen, a class, living in the village, but at best it is a makeshift measure. Those who live on campus are prone to forget this and to look upon the freshmen as something quite different from the "rest of us." It is probably true that college has any use at all, that girls in the three upper classes are more developed along many lines than the newcomers. College undoubtedly has a great deal to give the freshmen. On the other hand, they bring to Wellesley with a freshness of viewpoint, a variety of experience and ideas. By the time they come up to campus they are already well on the way to becoming "real Wellesley women." We would not discredit the Wellesley woman, but we do feel that there is a danger of conformity to type which can be better avoided through the influence of the freshmen than in any other way.

In a short time, village seniors are to be apponted. We feel that the responsibility of these girls is twofold. They do not go forth purely in the mission spirit to take to the poor, nighted freshmen the beauty of our campus civilization, but they are responsible to the other three classes for bringing the village into such close relationship with the campus that the college need not lose all the splendid vigor that is sure to come with 1923.

WELLESLEY TAKES HOLD.

Judging from the Free Presses in the last News, from the Salmagundi Expresses reproduced already, and from various events of the past week—such as Senior Surgical Dressing Class on Saturday—it truly seems as though the college were waking up from a long dream of nine to fifteen days. The question is, is the college really awake at last, or is it still dependent upon the good offices of conscientious individuals? Hygiene 21 teaches freshmen that stimulants are bad, and that they should do their work without being dependent upon such measures. The college at large thrives on stimulants. All war work and, indeed, any work that does not directly contribute to one's immediate present well being is out and starts. A large campaign is planned. The leaders exert a strenuous push and arouse public interest so that the excitement lasts long enough to push some big measure through. In a few days' time, we wonder if the college will resume its "what's a war, anyway?" attitude until some other harassed committee gathers its forces for another "big push." It serves as though it might be possible for Wellesley girls to wake up once and for all and not rely on the various campaigns to arouse them from their lethargy of indifference. Now that such an awakening appears to be at hand, it is hoped that every individual girl assumes her responsibility, and does not think she has done her part because she spends one hour a week at Surged Dresting. Spend six hours a week there, then give up trips to Town and buy Savings Stumps instead. Knit khaki instead of green yarn, and on every visit to the tea room remember that thousands of little children are starving.

AN INTRODUCTION TO OUR ALUMNAE.

One of our Wellesley publications—I refer to the Alumnae Quarterly—is not sufficiently known to the undergraduates. Because the publication is still quite new and because its name does not introduce it to us directly, we students have failed up to the present to become acquainted with the Quarterly and to realize its practical value. That we have the most important and the newest concerning our alumnae which the Quarterly affords, is evidenced by the fact that we constantly employ the office of the Alumni General Secretary as a bureau of information. To be sure, the General Secretary answers gladly our many questions, but in many cases she only refers us, for information concerning our particular alumnae friends, to a recent issue of the Quarterly. Had we been familiar with the contents of that publication and had it been at hand, we could have saved both the General Secretary and ourselves considerable inconvenience.

Not only because of its immediate value to us is the Quarterly deserving of support on the part of the undergraduates. It is to be remembered that News and Magazine, both of which we feel and understand the undergraduates to be very vital and important, are supported by alumnae, who, in their turn, have the right to expect our assistance in the support of the college publication which is of most importance for them.

On a third score, the Quarterly claims our attention. Because it reflects the thought and the activity of Wellesley's alumnae, it affords her undergraduates the opportunity to keep in touch with them as nothing else can possibly do; and, just at the present time when Wellesley women, both graduates and students, are joining hands to perform a great work, they have far undertaken—the maintenance of the Wellesley Relief Unit—this service of the Quarterly takes on an added significance.

The Quarterly does not claim our support in the form of financial contributions; it merely claims the right to be known and read by the students. Most assuredly, we should have it always at our disposal, and, if we do not feel that we can take it as individuals, we can at least insist that it be included among those magazines to which our house subscribes. Let us immediately make the acquaintance of the Quarterly, and let us not forget, if we are not forgetful, that our prospective house president for the coming year is that every dormitory needs and wants the Quarterly in its library.

THE MOST POPULAR GIRL IN COLLEGE.

Do you know who she is? She is everywhere. We doubt that she misses a single party on or off the campus. It's wonderful how universally she is received, in every dormitory every day, in each society, as an honorary member. Although she is far older than anyone else in college, she risks being prematurely and grows a little more important every year. Her stories are "simply delicious," all about how Miss Nemo of the Blank Department cried in academic council because the president spoke scathingly of her work. She knows who is nursing a crush on what infirmity under a cloak of smug civility and she tells about it, too. It was due to her that we found out all the important facts about how college closed for three weeks this winter to save fuel. We are convinced that if it had not been for Daue Rumor at that time we would have never known anything about it, for the administration is so secretive about what they are doing. We cannot overestimate the importance of her function when we realize that without her we should never have known the horrible tale of the senior dignitary who trampled on the honor of the college. Her mode of story telling is as elusive as it is versatile; every time she repeats an anecdote its details are more lurid. It is she who lends the spice to life, the ring to the third finger of almost everyone's left hand, and the suspicion of professionalism to the American citizen. Long live Daue Rumor and the glibbility on which she thrives!

DOWN WITH CAMFLOUSE.

Why the dim secretive light bromshoring societies? As freshmen their existence, save of the houses themselves, is unknown. And the society information on the subject is always tipped in the bud. As sophomores we are given the privilege of dancing at "Open House" second semester, but as to the club avars minerals of the society, we are kept in complete ignorance. Junior year when eligibility slips appear girls are heard to say "I don't know which to put down as choices; I like the girls in V., but I don't know anything about the work they do by members of them, a definite purpose beyond pleasant social intercourse, why isn't this purpose known to those eligible? But why aren't the information about the societies in secret gloom, anyway? Why not have their work and aims clearly understood by all students, thus doing away with those undesirable whimsical criteria, which are constantly distorting about the college?" 19.

IV.

What is it that puts societies on a different plane as far as expense goes, than the plane on which we as individuals are supposed to conduct ourselves? We look a little askance at girls who spend their substance for room decorations, but when a society feels that its rugs or wallpaper are slabby the obvious thing seems to be to replace them! Society continues to thrive despite the suspicion of entertaining every week at tea, yet we do not question the propriety of society open house. At least two societies are planning shore parties of present economics. It is still a shell shocked era—no important because they keep up the unity of the society. What's the matter with the society that needs such expensive upkeep for its unity? Which is more important anyhow, Wellesley society unity or national conserving unity?

UNIVERSITY NEWS.

One of the very few times that a Freshman notice at Wellesley is the neatness of Wellesley audien- cers. Whether the occasion be a Student Gov- ernment Forum, a Barn play, or a College Lee:
tune, the noise is always there; rumbling of papers, shuffling of feet, rattling and banging of chairs, and continual moving about. Moreover, be the speaker Ian Hay, Dr. King or President Pendleton, there are always people whispering, and not merely commenting on the lecture, sermon, or speech, but actually carrying on whole conversations. We have even noticed that speakers were considerably unmoved by the ascending clatter. It is all so entirely unnecessary that it could easily be eliminated if only we were a trifle more thoughtful of others. The very fact that in the Barn the acoustics are not as good as they are in the auditorium, the chairs are not stationary, should make us all the more careful to be absolutely quiet during a lecture or entertainment. At the Barn, too, it is practically impossible for one seated anywhere near the back of the hall to hear what is being said on the stage on account of the din made by those coming in late. We should think that people would have enough consideration for the rest of the audience or at least for the actors or speakers to make a special effort to be on time. Such, however, does not seem to be the case. For one thing people are not willing to come early and stand in line waiting for the doors to open. Is there any rational reason why the Barn doors cannot be opened half an hour or more before an entertainment begins? Doing this might at least reduce the number of late-comers. We are enjoying the additional privileges in hearing the best speakers in the country, and, as an audience, we certainly do not show much appreciation.

Here!

Is it actually true or did I dream it that since March 31, 1918, every appointment has been set ahead one hour. Why, pray tell, do we who now rise at 3.45, breakfast at 6.15, lunch at 11, and dine at 5.15, why do we who rush to classes at 7.40 instead of 8.40, have to return to the library at 6.30 unless with a charwoman? Since the 7.30 rules (see page 7, article 3; Grey Book) were made we are all living an hour ahead of time. Then why do we have to lose an hour of our precious days in Boston while it is still light and lacks an hour of being 7.20? Won't somebody please help me out?

I. K. '21.

Try logic. Perhaps that will help you out—or mathematics.

WHERE, OH WHERE, WAS 1919?

Last Saturday night was a dark one and a still one. The moon must have resembled the Ad. Building, for after an H.40 class, for all 1919 seemed to be out there; at least they were nowhere else to be found. Under cover of this death-like stillness 1920 abetted the traditional spade, wended her way by devious routes to a certain well-chosen spot, and there gave back to Mother Earth her offspring—for even math, books must revert to the dust from whence they came. This duty done, she formed a long procession, typifying that canvas bodice with the coffins (which contained, of course, the corpse of freshman tribulations) and the black-shrouded pall-bearers, and marched with stealthy trend to the green, where a dirge was sung. After about twenty minutes of "processioning" a few juniors were observed bobbing up from the boat house and from Shakespeare. "What's all this?" seemed to be the gist of their remarks. On being carefully told just what had occurred, it was fair to record their extreme present of mind in sending an impromptu ghost into the midst of the sophomores to represent the departed math, books (though it must be admitted that the single portions of the above named spirit rather detracted from the gravity of the situation). Much mutual putting on the buck was indulged in a little later by the ghost who, at some stage in the evening, they realized that they had at last succeeded in "putting one over" on the clever and usually wily '19.

FRENCH MEDALS ON EXHIBITION.

In the case now containing the Longitude medal, upstairs in the main building of the library, there will be displayed beginning with Thursday, April 25, a number of medals issued in France since the beginning of the war. These will include a French War Cross (La Croix de Guerre), a medal with an excellent likeness of the French general Gallifert issued in Paris just after his death, another of Washington and Lafayette, which appeared in Paris at the time of the entrance of the United States into the war. A third medal bears the head of "Papa Joffre," and a fourth an English medal struck to commemorate the tragic death of Lord Kitchener.

In this collection, too, there will be a number of purely artistic medals which may be duplicated by communicating with Mr. Samuel M. Waxman, 46 Avo Hill, Cambridge, Mass. These medals will be marked with a cross and numbered.

PLEA FOR TOWER COURT.

At the opening of the college year the regulation was made that entrance to Tower Court, after the dinner hour, 6.15, should be by the northwest door only.

The reason for the rule is obvious. It is impossible for the door guards to guard the four main doors of the great house and to attend to the number of calls made upon them for other duty during the evening.

Our friends do not mean to be inconsiderate, but they have so maltreated the door fastenings in their attempts to force an entrance after hours by a door, bolted but convenient for their especial errand, that we have been obliged to repair the locks of all the doors more than once, and in two cases to discard the beautiful but delicate brass handles for prosaic door knobs.

We fear that the members of our own household, though understanding the situation, are also sometimes careless.

With this explanation, may we ask for the cooperation of all in the protection of the building which we prize?

Government Positions.
The need of women to take the places of men in various government positions has given rise to several organized methods of making a connection between the places to be filled and the graduates of colleges for women. One such agency is the Intercollegiate Intelligence Bureau, established for women. The Women's Committee of the Council of National Defense at one time made a strong appeal to the colleges. There has also been the general scheme of securing positions through the U.S. Civil Service Commission, which has been an underlying feature in most of the work of the two special organizations noted above.

Another plan has now been adopted which is more directly connected with the Federal Government, and seems likely to prove permanent and effective. This is called the Women's Collegiate Section of the U.S. Employment Service of the Department of Labor. The examiner who has the main charge of classifying and scrutinizing applications is Miss Julia Newton Brooks. A letter from Miss Brooks has been addressed to the colleges, and the applicants are given below in condensed form.

The work is carried on in two distinct lines.

(1) Through the Civil Service Commission. In pursuance of this method, the College Adjutants, as the Secretaries and Directors of Appointment Bureaus are called, will receive all the Civil Service announcements of interest to college women, and application blanks which women wishing to apply for any of the various Civil Service positions must fill out. The blanks have not yet been received but will doubtless come in good time. The Civil Service notifications will be posted in the usual manner. These applications should be sent directly to the Civil Service Commission, and not through any other office.

(2) Through the Women's Collegiate Section directly. The office of the Women's Collegiate Section may in time time send to the college for lists of specially qualified alums. The procedure is that the Adjutant should notify the candidate to write a letter addressed to the office of the Women's Collegiate Section, making application for the position in question, and giving her education and experience. The candidate should also give the Adjutant three letters of recommendation which deal specifically with her ability in the work desired, and with her loyalty to the United States, together with a recent photograph, which may be a simple and inexpensive one. All such material should be forwarded by the Adjutant to the office of the Women's Collegiate Section.

Miss Brooks earnestly requests that candidates be not referred personally to the office of the Women's Collegiate Section. The Adjutants are kept constantly informed of the positions which are open both under the Women's Collegiate Section and under the Civil Service. Candidates can get no further knowledge about the positions by writing to the office in Washington.

Miss Brooks adds that she recognizes the need of women to take the places of men in various government positions but she also recognizes the need of women to take the places of men in various government positions but that there is no prospect of government positions for the summer only, under the Women's Collegiate Section. Candidates who desire positions within the Government for the summer are referred to the local branches of the Civil Service Commission. (For Boston, Civil Service Department of Labor, 33-37 Canal Street; for Chicago, U.S. Employment Service, 845 S. Wabash Avenue. These are given as illustrations.)

The need of technical training is more emphasized. College women are advised to prepare themselves in stenography and typewriting, to take courses in business administration, or executive management, or to get actual office experience. The Appointment Bureau of the College will be glad to register these skilled applicants if requested to do so and to keep their names, with the data described in (2), for transmission to Washington as they are called for by the Women's Collegiate Section.

The United States Civil Service Commission offers an examination for Scientific Assistant in Marketing, to be held on May 25 and 26, Wellesley officers no course of study directly preparatory to such a position, but a course of reading can be suggested through the department of Economics, which might afford a preparation. Address the Appointment Bureau, enclosing postage.

Professor Charles W. Stoddard, of the Department of Agricultural Chemistry, the Pennsylvania State College (State College, Pa.), calls attention to a special course offered by that department during the present summer to women holding a Baccalaureate degree and who have a knowledge of general chemistry, agricultural chemistry, and qualitative analysis. The special field will be that of the chemistry of agriculture, and the course will extend from May 1 to August 1. The object is to fit college women for special scientific work in agriculture within a short time. Any one interested should address Professor Stoddard.

Mr. David J. Terry, Executive Secretary of the Children's Service Bureau, 541 brick Annex, Pittsburgh, Pa., calls attention to opportunities offered to young women who have finished their Junior year in college, and who have had some Economics and Psychology, for a summer training course in the Children's Service Bureau. There will be two separate courses of six weeks each—June 15 to August 1, and August 1 to September 15. No tuition will be charged, and the apprentices will be expected to give their full time to the course. The Bureau will direct out of town students to proper boarding places, and will try to make their stay in Pittsburgh as pleasant as possible.

The New Athletic Underwear for Women

At the morning service on Sunday, April 28, Dr. G. Glenn Atkins of Detroit said that Christ had, by His supreme self-sacrifice, placed the cross against the sky line of humanity, never to be withdrawn. In happier times it is a reproach to us; but now it is the only helpful thing in the world.

The cross bears testimony that high things demand a high price and it challenges us to do our share. Because it marks the deepest sacrifice, the cross is a sign of joy.
FURTHER ADVENTURES OF DON QUIXOTE.

Now it chanced that as this dauntless Knight of La Mancha rode errant through the world, attended by his loyal squire, he came upon a fair enclosure facing a lake, and within this enclosure there were many palaces. But in the midst thereof, upon a desolate hill of yellow clay, there was a great hole, which seemed as though it were the den of some loathly dragon. And, indeed, as the good Knight approached, he could see the horrible monster crouching in his hair, and he perceived from the smoke and steam which issued from the creature's nostrils that it was one of the monsters known to the ancient as the Firedrake, of all prodigies the most terrible to encounter, which Bellerophon only overcame with great difficulty, and by the aid of the gods. At the sight the Knight's stout heart quaked within him, but he stood firm, and presently, perceiving that there were many dainties thevelent who were sorely distressed by the dragon, and forced a long way out of their path, he bequeathed to him that it were the part of valor to run a tilt with the creature. Then he boldly buckled up his armor, and took his lance from his squire. He drew near and challenged the creature in a loud voice.

The Firedrake screamed hoarsely in answer, and upon around to face the Knight. Jets of steam burst forth from his nostrils, and smoke poured from the sting upon his tail; his red side gleamed, and he roared most hideously. "This is the very scorpion-worm of the nethermost pit," thought the good Knight, but, reverencing the maiden, and reflecting that man cannot do better than perish in the cause of oppressed womanhood, he lowered his spear and, shouting his battle cry, charged upon the Firedrake.

The Firedrake lowered his head and nodded at the Knight. His monstrous jaws opened wide, revealing a cavity which might swallow a dozen men; there was the clash of steel on steel as the lance shivered; then the stout champion fell himself and his good steel lifted from the ground as the monster's jaws began to close. Nothing daunted, he vaulted lightly to the ground, unshielded his good blade, and rained blows upon the creature's armored side. Gradually the roaring ceased; the monster's head, its jaws closing upon the squirming horse, remained motionless in air. Then, before the good Knight's amused sight, a door opened in the Firedrake's belly, and a man of the meanest sort looked out.

"Hey, there! What's up?" he yelled. "Gimme a line on the movie stuff." Then seeing the re- doubtable Don Quijote stand speechless and amnified, he burst out, "Say, I guess you're a booz. Haven't you never seen a Marion Steam Shovel?"

Additional suggestions to be placed in the Freshman Blue Book for next year:

Develop a graceful curve in your box before arrival at Wellesley. The History Department is here for just such matters.

Bring a bicycle with you; but neglect to learn to ride until you get here. Your presence will be much more noticeable.

Be sure to take a five-mile walk before classes every morning. You will get little time to exercise during the day.

Do not bring a napkin ring; you will be able to buy one at Davis's just like everyone else.

Bring a needle, there is need of needle-like instruments at Wellesley.

THE PRICE OF SHAMEFUL PEACE.

More than a billion dollars of American agricultural exports were sold to the European nations at war with Germany during 1917. Had this Nation maintained peace at the price of obedience to the Bismarck laws, this European demand on the American market would have been closed and this billion dollars worth of agricultural products would, most of them, have rotted on farms and in warehouses, or burned to ashes with consequent stagnation and ruin to the American farmers.

Interest as well as duty urges the American farmer to give financial support to his Government in this war.

France, March 11, 1918.

Just a few lines to let you know that I am still alive. I am still at the front, where I have been for nearly forty days. We are back in a mine as a supply of gas for the front, and I will tell you how comfortable this is! We are about a mile from the Huns, so you see they have us covered pretty well with their big guns. We are kept going from about 2 a.m. to 3 p.m. and when we eat only eight men can go to mess at a time. Inside is a very nice place; we do not know day from night when we get out once in a while.

There are no rats, but only stay on a few hours during the day.

Our banks are fine; they are built on one top of the other, and they are stories high and about twelve in each story. They are made of burlap for a mattress, and it is all stretched so that when you lay in them to sleep you are about standing on your head.

With the noise and shanking you get from the guns over there it is not easy to manage to roll around in them the few hours we have, and at four o'clock up we get, make up our packs and stand ready for business until seven, then eat. At eight we start to the trenches, or to put up wire entanglements until noon and do the same thing in the afternoon.

The Huns made a good hit here today, killing both our men and horses, but how many do not know. When they are as near as that to me I don't stay around long to see what happens, as they can find the same spot too easy.

Well, this is just about the place I am at the present time. I could tell you about three or four other mines I stopped in for several days. One of them had sixty-two steps straight down. It was much better than this one, but the air in these places puts a fellow on the hump. All these places are shelled daily by the Huns. I also spent five days in the first line. Here I never slept for five days and five nights, and they had to carry the medicines and water two miles a day, and very little then. One we got at about 10 P.M. and one at 4 A.M. The mud was terrible; feet wet all the time.

The first time I saw the war was great. I wish you could see one, but not under the same circumstances. To tell the truth, I thought Hell was let loose, but every man was "on the job" and we were ready for anything. This time we were not bothered, but on one left they took twenty Huns as prisoners. We had one or two others, which was enough for me for a while. After we were relieved we walked eight miles across old battle fields, in and out of shell holes and on feet deep. Just before we reached the cave we were to stay in we started to climb a hill, and I will never forget that one; it took all that was in me to make the cave, and when I did I entered a room and fell on a bunk—ack and all—and stayed there until noon. Then we had dinner, which was bread and coffee—the first meal in forty-eight hours. We stayed here a few days to rest up, but I was so sick I could hardly get around. I was feeling better when they were ready to move again.

Tell the men on the grounds I received their box just before my second trip to the front, and I was very thankful, as I thought I would have without smoke, but they fixed me O.K. I want to thank them all for doing me such a good favor. In other words, the American Farmer and the American Soldier.

ALSACE-LORRAINE.

"Crown Prince Cannot Trust Alsatians. Orders Th at Not to be Placed in Front of Fighting Because of their German Sympathies." With these headlines from the Transcript of April 5 to pick up your curiosity, do you not want to learn something of the historical and economic background of the Alsace-Lorraine question, and have an opinion as to the solution of the question? Two hours' reading should secure these results.

For the history needed, read the article by Frederic Masson in the number for March (p. 482) of Current History. Stephen Lounanne, editor of Le Matin, when he visited Belfort in the winter and talked to the Paris City Club, gave the same facts with a color and fire which must have thrilled his audience. His address was reported in full in the Transcript of February 9. The text of the Declaration of Bordeaux, the stirring document presented by the representatives of Alsace and Lorraine when they left the French National Assembly in 1871, is given in Current History (vol. 6, pt. 2, p. 265), together with the Order of the Day adopted June 5, 1917, by the Chamber of Deputies of France, "unanimously pronouncing" the protest made before the Assembly in 1871. The pages seem hot with the feeling that had burned so fervently for forty-six years.

Politicians in the Fortnightly Review for March gives the facts about the population of the two districts in 1871 and since, and about their mineral and other resources. The latter part of this article, or similar statements in Current History (1665-6, 5:9-89), tell one reason at least why Germany wanted just these provinces in 1871, and why she still wants to retain them and the little but important Brey region now. The map in Current History for March (p. 485) will illustrate statements as to boundary lines and mineral deposits.

To the question about the sentiments of the disputed territories themselves, there are other German answers beside the headlines at the beginning of this article. Abbé Klein in the May Harper's repeats the story that officers of the invading German army in 1914 warned their men "Here we are in an enemy country," though Alsace and Lorraine had been a part of Germany for forty-three years. Read in the Commercial and Financial Chronicle of February 23 (p. 765-9), an article entitled The Question of Alsace-Lorraine and the Sentiments of the Nations, an incidental acknowledgment of the German Emperor's own is recorded in Current History (4:1090-1).

What do the belligerent plans for the provinces after the war? Van Herft's pronouncement for the Germans is discoverable in Current History for April (p. 100); the February issue contains Lloyd-George's statement (p. 285-70)—a clear and ringing one—and Mr. Wilson's (p. 375), and what I privately learned from a Socialist Conference at Lou- don thought is also given in the April number of the same magazine. (p. 199). For the sensational story of Emperor Karl's expression of opinion, see the New York Times for April 11.

For the story as a whole within one cover, the Library offers no better source than Prof. Hansen's book Alsace-Lorraine under German Rule.

WELLESLEY WAR SERVICE COMMITTEE.

All will be interested to hear that the Wellesley Relief Unit sailed last week, and the committee is hoping to hear soon of its safe arrival in France. The six members of the Unit who actually sailed were Mary Whitman, '13, Lesther, Sarah Barrows, '91, Grace Bisell, '06, Harriet Root, '97, Agnes Gilson, '16, and Dr. Augusta G. Williams (the Rudeflede member).

On Monday, April 15, the Unit was given a farewell party in New York, which has previously been described in the News. On the following Friday, Miss Pierce and Miss Crocker gave a very informal dinner at the Cosmopolitan Club to the members of the Unit, on which occasion President Pendleton, Miss Stimson and Miss Kelsey were present.

The committee is starting immediately to fill the vacancies in the Unit and hopes to have three more alumnae ready to sail early in June with Professor Jackson, so that our quota may be complete.

Miss Harriet M. Houghton of 1906 is Assistant Manager of the National Social Workers' Exchange, 130 East 22nd St., New York City, and is seeking women who have some previous training in work with delinquent or wayward girls, for protective work for girls in the neighborhood of camps. Miss Houghton is also looking for graduates who have majored in Economics, and who would be interested in case work for the Civilian Relief headquarters of the American Red Cross.

Miss Helen Anderson-Smith, instructor in French 1913-'16, sailed in February for Rome, for service in the military convalescent hospital, Umberto, Primo. The hospital is in charge of Baroness Somillo, wife of Italy's minister of foreign affairs. Miss Anderson-Smith will have charge of a ward of 200 beds, almost all of which will be occupied by Italian soldiers.

Plans for the 1908 Tenth year Reunion are under way with a committee of Boston girls in charge. It is hoped that a large number will return to help make this a great success. The committee is: Lush Curtis Baker, Helen Thompson Sheild, Miriam Flanders, Hattie LaPiere Hayes, Frances Noyes Thompson, Ruth Mifflin Birdsell.

The News is in receipt of the monthly report of the American Fund for French Wounded, which contains some interesting pictures and descriptions of the work of the organization. Edith A. Winter, '17, is now a member of the editorial department. She has been in France since February and was first working in the packing department. The Technology War Service Auxiliary sent to the Wellesley-Rademille Unit a trunk of women's clothing made especially for the Volt. It included the following articles: 41 blouses, 41 drawers, 41 petticoats, 36 aprons, 23 dresses, 23 dress skirts, 45 blouses, 35 handkerchiefs, and 6 towels. More numbers and lists give no suggestion of the quality and attractiveness of the goods, and we cannot too strongly express our appreciation of this gracious and friendly gift.

The dates are May 10 and 17. Mr. Copehand is sure to interest, amuse, instruct and inspire a college audience. His wide knowledge of English Literature is an unusual preparation for reading with insight and authority. He has abounding vitality and humor.

It is hoped that every seat in the hall may be taken. There are a few tickets left at fifty cents a reading that may be secured of Miss Bennett at Billings Hall Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday mornings.

LECTURE ON CHINA.

Dr. William Wesley Peter will speak on Public Health Education in China on Friday, May 3, at 8 o'clock, in Billings Hall, under the auspices of the Department of Hygiene. Dr. Peter represents the National Medical Association, the Medical Missionary Association, and the Y. M. C. A. of China, and has toured the principal cities of that country as a practical public health missionary and sanitary evangelist and organizer. Few Americans are better qualified than Dr. Peter to speak with thorough understanding, as well as sympathy, of Chinese character and of the latent forces and resources which will, in the not very far future, give to China an importance in world commerce and world politics which the average Occidental does not now suspect. All are cordially invited.

AN ENGLISH LIBERAL'S OPINION.

Mr. S. K. Ratcliffe, the lecturer who will speak in Billings Hall Friday afternoon, May 3, is especially worth hearing, since he is expressing the opinion of the English Liberal Party concerning the coming international order. Mr. Ratcliffe is the officially authorized lecturer on current events to the umamilton workers of England, and is widely known as the leading Liberal journalist of the nation.

The lecture is given under the auspices of the History Department. An admission fee of fifteen cents is charged, and tickets will be on sale at the Elevator Table Wednesday and Thursday mornings.

$150 REWARD.

A reward of $150 is offered by Margaret Her- ring for the return of two diamond rings, a solitaire and a dinner ring, which disappeared April 18.
