With subscriptions $8,145.32 in excess of her quota of $8,000, Wellesley College earned the “Fire Drive” of the United War Work fund which began on November 14. The drive as originally planned was to last from Thursday morning until Saturday noon; however, because of the short time allotted it was decided to extend it until Monday morning.

“Now to Give Until 2 Hours or Until 2 Feels Good.”

On Thursday appeals were made for a hundred per cent subscription, every girl to give as much as she could afford to give. “Now to give till it hurts but to give until it feels good,” was the motto of the drive.

Due to the efforts of the posters committee the interior and exterior of buildings and the trees on campus were adorned with posters emphasizing the need of money. Stretching the entire length of the Elevator Table was a poster, executed by students of the college, depicting the work of the organizations included in the drive. On the steps of the Administration Building, a number of men moving along a figured line marked the tally day by day.

The Last Days of the Drive.

The reports of the canvassers on Thursday night fell short of the amount that should have been raised. Efforts were redoubled on Friday. Margaret Christian and Mary Crone made stump speeches that afternoon, urging their hearers to follow the sign and “Give!” In the evening speeches were made in the dormitories, repeating their plea. It was requested in some of the houses that five minutes of the dinner conversation be devoted to the United War Fund Drive. There were several gifts by houses—Cazenove and Beebe on campus and Waban Street and Crofton in the village contributed.

Saturday morning the feeling prevailed that Wellesley had not done her duty. At twelve o’clock rumor said that the college had raised only $15,000. New reports of contributions poured in from many sources, many subscriptions were raised—and at last it was announced that Wellesley had passed the $30,000 mark. In order to get further over the top it was decided to continue the drive until Monday.

Methods of canvassing.

The success of the drive was due largely to the efficient way in which the canvassing was done. At each table in every dining room one girl was assigned to collect money and pledges from those at her table. One girl in each house supervised the work and received the money and pledges from the canvassers.

A detailed report of the amounts contributed follows:

| Faculty—Executive and Administrative Staff | $1,082.03 |
| Students | $18,127.32 |
| Mills | $25,000.00 |
| Men | $100,000.00 |
| Totals | $69,249 |

$81,453.32

Sophomore "Prom" Opens Season at the Barn.

The Sophomore Promenade held in honor of the freshman class last Saturday afternoon and evening was distinguished not only as an annual success, but as the final completion of the farm work that had to be done in the Barn, and the beginning of the use of the building for other college activities. It was difficult to recognize in the gayly decorated, crowded hall the dusty, beam-strown room over which the college has worked so many hours this fall. Nothing could have been more fitting than that Dr. Ferguson, who has given so much of her time to seeing the Barn through the driving up the farm, should attend in the receiving line this first time that it was used.

The Sophomore class, in view of the exigencies of the times and the necessity for economizing, decided to economize greatly. There were no printed programs and no outside orchestra, the music which was excellent, being furnished by talented members of 1930 and 1931.

One very popular feature, which added greatly to the success of both the afternoon’s and the evening’s entertainment, was the individual dancing of Birdie Krupp, "21, who performed an expressive Barcarolle to the music of Vivaldi and Dravid.

Those who received in the afternoon were Dean Waite, Dr. Ferguson, Maude Ludington and Ethel Halsey. In the evening they were President Pendleton, Miss Tutu, Maude Ludington and Ethel Halsey. The committee in charge of the Sophomore Promenade was as follows: Ethel Halsey, chairman, Margaret Haddock, Helen E. Miller, Catherine Mitchell and Louise Stirling.

A Soldier’s Peace.

Lieutenant Constance Dawson, the well-known author of "Carry On," The Glory of the Trenches, and "How to Win," his country assembled in the Barn, evening, November 13, on the attitude of the fighting man to peace. His discussion of the soldiers’ views on what the war has taught the world, the part it is to play, and the new standards he desires to be sent back to fighting lines in January.

J. L. Dawson was wounded at Viny Ridge in 1917 and for the second time on September 2 in the great attack which the Canadians made along the Cambrai-Arras road, in which they succeeded in breaking the Hindenburg Line.

"It was the Divine Accident that beat the Hun," said J. L. Dawson, "the Divine Accident which was consistently in our favor, and from which I did not American soldier might be brought for us. If we had not won what would have happened? Either men would say "There is no God" or God is a brute greater than the Hun, not the kind of God we have come to know these nineteen hundred years since Christ was born."

"Peace you will dictate to yourselves," continued J. L. Dawson and that peace will depend on what we are going to get out of the war in spiritual values. The fighting man has taught that it is the spirit that counts—not money nor caste nor appearance. For him this has resulted in re-examination of men who have shown such greatness of spirit that physical unfitness or insufficiency have not counted. He has also learned that, "It isn’t life that matters, it’s the courage you bring to it." He has developed a new philosophy, your life, go in glory and dare to God."

And tenderness not brutality and the "glory of renouncing self" in doing something for the man on the right and on the left have become a part of the soldier’s philosophy.

English civilians have learned many of these things because the men came back to them on leave during the war. Through service the women have found that men have virtues, and men, soldiers and civilians all, are taught to admire American women. American civilians must learn as they have to meet the problem of restituting the materialized by love, and a greater social responsibility.

In considering the contributions of the nations J. L. Dawson spoke of the sympathy which America had given when the Red Cross definitely and generously did the work of France. Before the nation entered the war which helped so materially to "loose the morale" of the people and the armies. America on the other hand should never forget that England suffered in the first years and in the Somme and the trenches. America was as follows: Ethel Halsey, chairman, Margaret Haddock, Helen E. Miller, Catherine Mitchell and Louise Stirling.

A THOUGHT FOR ROJECKERS

That Wellesley would ultimately go over the top in the United War Work Drive we never for a moment doubted. The College has yet to be found wanting in a crisis of this kind. Many times before it has looked as though she were not going to fulfill her quota for some particular need, but always in the end she has come up to what was required of her. So has she done in the recent campaign.

But how has she done it? What has been the spirit with which Wellesley has gone "over the top"? Have we given spontaneously, generously, wholeheartedly, or have our contributions been wrung from us by dint of last-minute persuasion? Have we been caught upon guard, and the figure of "flexible" by "pulling teeth," there is something wrong with the spirit of the givers. There are, of course, those who give first, and last also, but there is again a deplorable number who do not give until they are compelled with the defeat of the College in the drive.

Therefore, while rejoicing that Wellesley has reached her high-water mark in this campaign, let us bear in mind for future reference the goal that is being set, and especially giving that involves our men at the front,—as much to do with spirit as it has with actual funds.

HOOVER HAUNTS HER

Since the signing of the armistice, the notion has been prevalent that war is over and that lifting of rigidities we have been compelled upon to do need no longer be continued. In her reaction from the strain and her joy in the cessation of fighting, Wellesley has celebrated as did the old Greeks on the same news. There had been a battle before her the ghost of Mr. Hoover whose admonition she has so recklessly disregarded. "Your burden will be larger after the armistice than before" we hear him say.

It has now become not only a question of supplying the allies but also of conquering the starvation of Russia, Turkey, the Central Powers and Finland. In order to fortify the people of Holland, Belgium and northern France for the task of reconstruction, these men and women who during four years have been undernourished, must be fed. Now that the menace of the U-boat no longer exists and more ships can be used for carrying food-stuffs the supplies of Australia and South America will become accessible, but this takes time. Meanwhile we who feel almost charyed by not having a more active part to play in the Great War, still have our opportunity. It stirs us in the face; and in our relief from the tension of the past months, we must not push it aside. There is still a vivid need for self-restraint and we can scarcely forget that still much extra exertion is required in such Red Cross work as sewing and knitting.

While our men were fighting and the livid shrapnel tracks mark the German lines, Wellesley was suffused to sacrifice. They need our support as much as ever; we cannot fail them now.

"THE DOCTRINE OF A SECOND CHANCE.""The House of Representatives is about to reconsider the very recent ruling that one "serious error" shall place a girl on probation. This means that a girl who is called upon very suddenly, and forced altogether to register or to cancel her registration will not be permitted to have Wellesley except by special permission for three weeks. It means that a freshman quite unused to the use of privileges passes through six instances of very slight carelessness in filling out her registration slip. Anyone who sleeps through a fire drill incurs the same penalty. Is it just?

The students very generally do not think it just. The House of Representatives and the House President's Counsel have both ruled it too strict. Public opinion in so far as it can be gaged from stray bits of conversation on this campus is strongly opposed to the rule. The Senate alone stands out in the belief that an arrant piece of carelessness should be punished by a measure so stern. The Senate, however, does not represent strictly student opinion.

The students, it is, who will have to suffer the punishment of probation, and if they are honestly convinced that the penalty is unjust, can enforce it's enforcement. There is at least a danger that by imposing a punishment too severe by those whom it affects, College Government will encourage evasion of the very law it wishes to enforce.

Such punishment is surely not needed out in a spirit of retribution. The day of retributive punishment it is to be hoped, is past. No doubt College Government aims through this rule to help those who have carelessly produced a menace to the community and to themselves all through their lives. And yet if the rigidity of the law makes those who suffer its punishment rebellious, all that it can produce is revolt and not reform. The way to help a girl who is habitually careless is to point out the fact of her shortcomings and to give her at least one more chance to overcome them before more drastic steps are taken.

II.

ONE SERIOUS ERROR SHOULD EQUAL "PARD." The "penalty for incurring one serious error shall be a loss of privileges for three weeks." This is a rule which is in force for the last few weeks and which has become the source of a great deal of discussion.

It was brought up first by the Senate, then the House President's counsel asked the Senate to reconsider the action it had taken, which it did, with the same conclusion that it had reached the first time. It reconsidered once more at the request of a group of students, and even after this third thoughtful and careful investigation the Senate decided that its first conclusion was still the wisest solution of the problem.

It is with registration that the new rule is most concerned, and in so important a matter as this there ought to be no carelessness or laxity since registering is the only way we have of holding our privileges, and when we mess up or make the case of an emergency which may be only a matter of pleasure or convenience, but sometimes is a matter of life or death. As the rule stood before, there was no sure way of catching one for privileges check up,—a bewray much too large to prevent a great deal of careless insatiation to legislative rules. As it stands now a penalty is incurred after the first serious error which causes a discouragement of use a careless use of our privileges and the forgetfulness which is so often our excuse for breaking the rule. And the penalty seems to me a just one, for loss of privileges, while a very real and decided punishment is not so severe a measure as we've been accustomed to think it because it does hold, in a way, an element of gambling. For instance,—it lasts for three weeks. Now, in that time a girl may have several trips she'd like to take, or she may not want to do anything from which loss of privileges would debar her. The probability is that the average girl would have in that time not more than a great of half the privileges would be a deterrent and surely that isn't so stringent a punishment. The point has been brought up many times that such a penalty for not registering was very hard tempered. Why then, have there not get here they are a given month in which their mistakes in registration are not counted as de- ments, but the Village Seniors point out the errors and do their best to warn and instruct for future reference. If, as most of us believe, the best time to form our habits is when we are young this scheme should be a good one, for a freshman who loses her privileges or remembers her rights one by one, of course may next year won't be likely to have any trouble with her memory for the rest of her course—she'll have formed the right habit.

As for the upper classmen—we can't very well plead that we don't know the rules because after two or three years' acquaintance we ought to be pretty familiar with them. So for us the new rule is a sharp jog to the memory and a witness of self-control and our privileges.

In the short time we've had this rule there has been a very marked improvement in the spirit the girls have about remembering to register and using their privileges in the way they make. It is proving itself to accomplish what the old rule did not—a cessation of carelessness. Since it is working so well now, at least let as try it a little more thoroughly before utterly condemning it.

THE PEACE WAR AHEAD.

We rejoiced at the armistice—I wonder how many of us gasped—"Am I ready for it?" It has been hard to live steadily at college when we saw our friends, making munitions or wearing uniforms. We have stayed to study, for we have had to use our minds, to get ready to face problems of reconstruction. And the little we have done is so pitiful, the need so great, that we shall have to work harder than ever.

We all hold various remarks as "worn to get back to normal after the war," or "Thank goodness, I can eat now," or "Well, I can't do anything about the peace." We could not say much about these if we had not been prepared for what we may do. We are prepared, I think, to use our opportunities. Our spirit will be behind the peace treaty. Our training will determine our attitude in future questions of community interest. It is our work to create opportunities, and we can do no better than to use college as our practice ground, and our work as the guide-post.

Does it not seem as if things were now sufficiently settled so that we might have dinner guests from other dormitories? Of course, we all realize how very difficult the service problem has been this year, and how that, with the necessity of quarantine, made it really nice to exchange guests for dinner earlier in the fall. But now many of the dining rooms have left their full number of maid's, at least enough to make conditions seem fairly normal; the quarantine is lifted; and there seems to be no further reason why we should not have dinner guests. I think that we are all getting out of touch with our friends in other dormitories. We have very little time to be together except at mealtime, and yet, we may occasionally and under our conditions, see our friends at the tea rooms very "few and far between," it does seem as if we need the privilege of exchanging guests even more this year than ever before.

For New Dresses.

Why is not the Chapel open for visitors during daylight hours at least? It frequently happens that one's friends or relatives passing through Wellesley wish to see the buildings, and particularly the Alice Freeman Palmer memorial. It is highly incongruous to be obliged either to bring guests through the maze of pipes and ventilators which constitute the chapel basement or to leave said guests standing outside while one runs out an elusive janitor to open the door. If it could be arranged that one door of the chapel and one only, be open from morning until the janitor's departure at five, it would save trouble to guests and would offer such an appearance of hospitality as the present impression of bare and empty doors.

If there is any reason why this plan is not advisable, the students would be glad to learn it and cease their murmuring against a seemingly unreasonable restriction.

"The price is not yet won; the civilians are to run the last lap," Comingshaw Dawson told us. How many of us are accepting this challenge? After the war, the glorious war, with all its courage, and self-sacrifice, and idealism, comes peace. But what kind of peace are we to have? Will we slip back into the rut of selfish, antithetical ante-bellum days, or will we fix fast hold on that which the war has brought us and live it out? That, it seems to me, is what we should all be thinking about now. The finer spirit, which we have purchased at so dear a cost, must not be lost; and in a very real sense it is up to us as college women to insist upon its realization.

SATEEN ACTION REGARDING PROBATION.

"The Senate regrets that, acting in its capacity as disciplinary body, it has made a decision which it deems satisfactory to the House, but it nevertheless feels it is necessary to consider that its action in regard to loss of privileges is not unduly severe." It was decided at the Senate meeting on Monday, Nov. 4, to send this expression of opinion to the House of Representatives in answer to their report of October 21 concerning probation—"That the sense of the meeting was that two serious errors should constitute probation instead of only one." At this meeting the Senate approved the plan of sending Ruth Coleman, speaker of the House, to the Senate or the Chairman of the Senate to the House, whenever either body wished the opinion of the other. It has been felt that the two bodies were not working in co-ordination because of ignorance of the opinions and feelings of the two. The separation was to one of the other will, it is hoped, overcome the difficulty.

In order to centralize the power of giving Sunday permissions in the Heads of Houses, the Senate approved the action of the House in voting that all exceptional permissions for travel on Sunday be hereafter given by Heads of Houses.

Formerly it was necessary to apply to the President or Vice-President of the Association for such permissions. Also the Senate endorsed the House's action regarding fire-drills; "the penalty of a fine to be abolished and that of one serious error be retained."

PEACE CELEBRATION AT WELLESLEY.

many had a chance to see the greater part of the parade which was made up of townpeople. It was led by marshals, who were closely followed by the Draft Board and the Selectmen, and led veterans of the Civil War and veterans of the Spanish War, soldiers honor on leave; the ladies of the Wellesley Red Cross, Girl Scouts, Boy Scouts and other organizations.

In the forefront of the Faculty division, a French flag lent by Monsieur Perdrin was carried by members of the French department, an Italian flag was lent by Dr. Linellini, and Miss Lowater carried the British flag. The American flag was carried by the Faculty by Miss Moody and Dean Walter; for the employees by Mr. Austin and Mary Muse of Main House, and for the students by Elizabeth Ford and Helen Merrill.

The long line marched down Central street, through Wellesley square, and followed the road to Wellesley Hills. Red fire lighted the way and the glowing lanterns carried by the students helped brighten the scene. Flaps hung everywhere. Small boys with tin horns and noisy voices helped add to the noise of automobile horns, whistles and bells which filled the air with their din. Yet the students sang as they marched, and kept together—triumphing to the tune of "Keep the Home Fires Burning," and "Good Morning, Mr. Zip-Zip-Zip." until it seemed as if there could be no more song or text left in them. But they kept on, around the square at Wellesley Hills, and back up the long road to Wellesley, past East Lodge and down Christmas Tree alley to the chapel. They poured in through the big doors, made a circle and singing as if they had not been shouting their loudest all the evening.

Miss Pendleton's prayer and Miss Bencet's reading of patriotic poems expressed the deep feeling of joy which none had been able to put into words.

The following day, laid aside by Governor McCall for a state-wide holiday, was variously observed by the student body. A large majority of students betook themselves to Boston, some to attend special church services, more to watch the great parade. There was a new kind of impressiveness in seeing ranks upon ranks of men in uniform swinging down Tremont street, and knowing that they were not bound for the trenches.

It was with renewed patriotism and enthusiasm that Wellesley started in the following morning, filling every seat, and singing as if they had not been shouting their loudest all the evening. Miss Pendleton's prayer and Miss Bencet's reading of patriotic poems expressed the deep feeling of joy which none had been able to put into words.

C. A. CONTRIBUTORS.

Since the contribution envelopes of Christian Association and the War Chest are so similar it seems necessary to urge everyone to be careful about not confusing the two. Please notice that the C. A. envelopes are plain with just a number, whereas the others have War Chest printed upon them.

RACHEL JONES, '19, chairman of the celebration committee, says that the parade was only one item in the committee's work, for the class contest held Friday and Tuesday to clear the barn of beans was managed by this committee, which also plans this week to get the beans sorted by a volunteer squad from each house.
THE BILLINGS PRIZE TABLET.

Mural tablets are not common in Wellesley College, but as their advantages for memorial and commemorative uses are appreciated they will doubtless increase in number. The tablet to William S. Roughton in the Chapel, that inscribed to Caroline Frances Pierce in the Pierce Memorial Room—a gift from her Class, a small tablet on the organ case in Billings Hall from the Class of 1905, and now the beautiful bronze tablet in Billings Hall, the gift of former President Hazard, —these are all Wellesley can boast. I am not forgetting the two tablets to Professor Carla Wennerblad and to Professor Eliza Norton Horsford that had a place in the old College Hall Library, nor the memorial to the Minute Men on Washington Street, erected by Mrs. Durant. The Billings Prize tablet is by far the largest and finest one we have. It is designed, cast, and finished by the Gorham Company of New York, the celebrated firm of silversmiths, and was placed on the wall in Billings Hall by the Tilden-Thurber Corporation of Providence; it weights several hundred pounds, since it took four men to lift it to its place; it is five feet wide, by three feet seven inches high.

The Billings Prize, amounting to about one hundred dollars in gold is meant to distinguish those students who have in some way shown real power in music, either through performance or composition. It is awarded by the President of the College and Professor of Music annually if in their opinion there is any student worthy of it. An inspection of the cut will show that in addition to the names already inscribed there is room for twenty-nine more.

By her gift of this tablet Miss Hazard has enriched our already beautiful hall, and has shown us once more how keenly alive she is to imaginative and spiritual values.

We thank her.

MR. RIDGELY TORRENCE READS FROM HIS POEMS.

Mr. Ridgely Torrence read from his own poems on November 14, at Tower Court. Mr. William S. Brighthwaite, the well-known poet-critic of the Transcript and a poet himself, was one of an interested audience.

Mr. Torrence has had a varied career as librarian, editor, and secretary to Baron Knausko, the special envoy of Japan. He is the author of The House of a Hundred Lights, El Durado, Abhord and Heliose, several plays for a negro theater, and various poems, of which Ego-Witness and Rituals are especially noted.

His first selection, Gravey Memorie, one of the plays representing the American negro of today, was tremendous in the revenge and frenzy of Gravey Memorie and Mr. Torrence rendered the negro dialect in vivid and realistic fashion. Next he read the poem Ego-Witness, a ballad of a troupe who found Christ along a railroad track in a storm. Among several unpublished poems, were two very delicate odes addressed to children—An Invitation to Dance, and Jeon's Singing. He ended with Sea-Drama, The Manger, and his latest poem, Force. All showed that he is indeed, as Mr. Brighthwaite said, "a real poet."

THE COMPETITION ISSUE OF THE MAGAZINE.

It is interesting to note in the recent Summer Competition Number of the Wellesley College Magazine the place that war subject matter occupies in the minds of the competitors. Both the prize poem and the story deal with different aspects of war experience. The brevity and simplicity of the Equisilea concentrate its value. In Selfishness there is a very real appeal in the pathos with which a tragic situation is revealed to us. The style of this bit of prose pleases because of its concrete and yet natural variety. The editors are to be commended for their restraint in awarding no essay prize. The Worcester sketches printed, although rich in material, fail to call forth that responsive sympathy which a work with universal appeal must evoke.

An attempt to qualify the whole issue is difficult and perhaps unnecessarily severe. But it would seem as though competition work, which is probably more carefully executed than the average bit, might attain a more mature standard than does the average number in this issue. This is not to discount the value of broad, quick, simple, pathies and keen freshness of outlook.

MODERN AMERICAN PAINTERS.

POINTS FROM THE PARADE.

Directions to Leaders of Parade.
Do not let anyone know where the parade is going. Have it stop at frequent intervals to cool its heels, preferably long enough so that everyone may take turns asking the song leaders why we don't move. Be friendly and be on your best behavior. Stop the parade and make it right about face. This is guaranteed to cheer everyone up by making her think that she is going home. When you think enough cheer has been generated face them about and proceed as before.

Directions to Song Leaders.
Be lively! Run up to the Parade line and get the turns then run back and give it to your section. As soon as you are well started, say it loudly. Then run up to the advance guard and get them by. By this method there will be no danger of confusing either the audience or the choir with one tune. If you think more song leaders are needed try tunes down the line, summon a few of your friends to help you. They will be glad of the exercise.

Dance to the Band and Fire.
Do not be rank and vile! Help out the song leaders. They are always grateful for suggestions. Begin by "sushing" loudly whenever the song leader forgets to do it. When you get tired of keeping in line (3) run out and start a new song. The proportion of song leaders to singers should be three to one. Whenever the parade stops, get your chairs to help you climb a tree so that you can see how you look. When weary of singing stop and yell, particularly when you pass a street car or automobile. It impresses the passengers with your patriotism.

Dear Ma:
Last night 1911 had its sophomore prom for us freshmen. It was just like anything that you could have quit making butter and have cease to see it, though I will say some things about it weren't much for style, because back home when we give parties we real celebrate and I felt awful self-conscious going with her. I'm not one to act proud-like, but I just let my roommate know that I went to the prom with the girl who was sub on the sophomore running team. "Sushi" is short for sublime and they pick a few from each team, just to show which are the real good players. Say, I guess our Jake could be sub on the pancake-eating team, what? Well, anyhow, there were some real nice folks waiting to meet me. They were all lined up and they all gave me a shake just as glad to see me as Pa was to see our spotted Jersey the day Liddy Jones fetched her home after we thought she put downed, and I was glad to see them too, because they were pretty celebrated though I don't think none of them were sub yet. Some dancing! Say, the place was that jammed, you'd have thought it was at least a county fair.

My feet are sore today, but, oh boy, it was worth it. Tell the folks back home my little village will have a parade for me when I get home. I'm getting so used to it psychiatrist. Tell 'em I won't forget 'em though, but I sure am changed a lot. Idaho wouldn't recognize little.

Mr. And.
THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

The News counts itself very lucky to be the first publication to print this new article of M. Perieiian's on The League of Nations:

America and France—the two great countries whose hearts are touching in spirit of the moment—have just accepted logically the greatest victory the world has ever known, the victory of the higher Humanity, the victory of present and future over past. But there remains another victory which America and France must win together again, since they complete each other so admirably: that is, the victory of the larger Humanity over narrow nationalisms, by the organizing of The League of Nations, or what would be better, if it were possible, of The United States of the World.

Indeed, such an idea is still far from being a reality, although it has made enormous progress, over the whole world, during the last few years. The idea of uniting altogether against a great common enemy, war, is one of the tragic lessons which Humanity has just been taught. Humanity feels now that, after slavery, its greatest enemy is war; that, if humanity does not specifically kill war, there are good reasons to fear that, in a near future, it will be killed by war. Fear is often the beginning of wisdom; it was chiefly from fear that, in the swampy forests of our prohibited past, was born our social instinct, which organized our first social cell, the human family, then the human tribe, and then the human nation. Is now that some old instinct of danger going to succeed in organizing at last humanity? Let us hope so.

Good reasons may easily be found to support and encourage that instinct. What is this finishing war most eloquently teaching Germany? That, for individuals, narrow selfishness is a mistaken policy; that, after all, it does not pay, on the contrary it costs a great deal; to seek one's own interest outside or against the common welfare. Nowadays it would pay even for nations to broaden their nationalities by organizing, "the United States of the World."

We all want a future better than the past, more secure, more protected. A basis of security more solid than the old balance of powers must be found. After disposing of German Kaiserism and militarism, the civilised world is now finding the place ready to start the foundation of a great international construction, which will protect the future of our civilisation. All the heroic and innumerable sacrifices, accepted in this war, claim a more positive result than the defeating of Germany. The victory of Human and Christian civilisation will not be complete, as long as the great universal revolution, the one which is able to prevent all the others by absorbing them in advance, is not achieved.

Of course, on the way to that League of Nations stand many and great difficulties. It is to be hoped that the wise men of the nations will be strong enough to remove them. Each nation has its own personality, which must not be destroyed, its own interests, its own ambitions and aspirations which are legitimate. Some of the nations have possibilities of great superiorities, in one field or another, and naturally they want complete freedom of development, to the detriment of the great common welfare. In that matter, the principle of justice is simple and easy to agree upon, but the application of it will probably be most difficult.

The same remark may be made about the international machinery of the League. That machinery can easily be conceived as a kind of enlargement of the governmental machinery of the United States, but the difficult problem will be to make it work. It seems that it would necessarily include three main parts: an international Parliament, vested with the powers necessary to take care of an international legislation; an international tribunal, to which all the disputes and differences between nations would have to be submitted for arbitration; a supranational military force, to defend the League or to enforce its decisions. In any case, the whole of this compulsory machinery would prove inadequate. What will make the working of such a machinery difficult, at least for a time which may be very long, is the great problem of international politics. Each nation thinks that it alone possesses the combination which will alone be able to solve all problems. All these combined efforts will be powerless to solve all problems. This is the cause of the world production; this is the cause of the world production. The League of Nations, to protect the future of humanity, will remain Germany. We hear that Germany now wishes nothing better than a good League of Nations into which she is willing to enter at once, and that the other nations will be willing, of course. But the present world cannot afford, after this war, to associate with Germany as a possible leader. Germany has just proved herself to be too bad a leader; that is surely now the opinion of Bulgaria, Turkey and Austria, without counting the rest of the world.

The question really is this: When the Allies have made the right use of their unqualified victory, by exacting from Germany complete repatriation for all the wrongs which she has done to Belgium, France and the other countries, for all the crimes she has committed against the conscience of the world, will she then be willing to enter, on production of course, a League of Nations, with the Entente Powers? Possibly not. What would be measures of justice and of security would probably be called by Germany measures of violence. "Justice," like "honor," like "culture" might not have the same meaning for Germany as for the civilised world. Rather than not to be admitted into the League on the same footing as the other nations Germany may prefer not to enter at all. On the other hand, she cannot be forced. All that the Allies can do is to try to show her that her conditions will be worse out than in. Whatever decision Germany may take, the present German generation will not probably give up all ideas of revenge. The great danger for the world will remain Germany and Europe, even without her "shining arm," her "dry powder," and her "snuffed out." At the best, with Germany defeated, punished, repentant and converted, the policy of a "League of Nations" can only be to trust Germany and be on your guard.

In the death of Anna Margaret Miller, of the class of 1914, the Wellesley Club of South-Eastern Penn. contributed a love poem deeply felt by the Club and each individual member. Any undertaking of the Club was sure to be accomplished by her genuine and practical enthusiasm, and her ability and willingness to give unreservedly of her time and strength to her Alma Mater. Then too, her powers of leadership commanded recognition, just as her genial personality contributed a spirit of cordiality to the meetings of the club. As a friend and leader she was loved by all Wellesley women whose privilege it was to work with her and know her. We, as members of the Club, wish to extend our sympathy to her parents, her sister, our fellow club members and all her family.

VILLAGE RED CROSS ROOM REOPENS.

Village Red Cross Room in the Village, started and maintained through the generous efforts of 1921, will reopen for service. Until after Christmas, when 1922 will have had a chance to organise, the squadrons class has voted to pay for the upkeep of the Room and to supply monitors from the Campus Red Cross Room. Under the general supervision of Mrs. Hayward, Director of the Red Cross Work at Wellesley College, Mrs. Richardson and Mrs. Hamilton have most kindly consented to take charge of the Village work on different afternoons. For the present the freshmen are not asked to pledge definite amounts of time but judging from the great interest and enthusiasm displayed at the opening of the Red Cross Room at the beginning of the year it should always be well filled.

WELLESLEY COLLEGE LIBRARY.

It seems right that the college community should know that in spite of all attempts to teach the spirit of loyalty to the community and regard for the rights of other individuals, not to mention such fundamental matters as honesty and respect for the college property, the following acts of vandalism have been discovered in the library during the past two weeks.

Vol. 7 of the Catholic Encyclopedia, a set costing nearly one hundred dollars, and of which it is practically impossible to replace single volumes, has had the six pages on the lives of Henry VII and Henry VIII deliberately cut out and removed—probably to be dishonestly copied and fraudulently stolen.

A new copy of Cooper’s Last of the Mohicans has been stolen, the person taking it first having torn out the stamped frontispiece and title page in an attempt to remove marks of library ownership and have it passed off as another book.

Of course the entire absence of the love of books which would make impossible such treatment of them is due to a lack of home training which the college is powerless to supply; but it seems that other accounts the weight of college opinion should fall so heavily on the culprit, if discovered, that such a thing could not happen again.

ROBERT E. SPEER SPEAKS AT CHAPEL.

At Houghton Memorial Chapel, on Sunday morning, November 17, Mr. Robert E. Speer, of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, presented the general principles of the undertaking. The underlying principles of life, he said, were great simple truths. These have been hard to discover lately during the world-wide struggle which has changed so many values, but they are to be found by those who are trusting and who have a simple need. War, he said, has been a great disillusionment and simplifier. It has organized the confusion of a complex society into a unified system with one head and one purpose. Is it possible, after this rigidity is relaxed, to keep the same unity of interest and faith?

Mr. Speer showed that people do not bring enough simple trust into their relationships with Christ, with the world or with their fellow men.

“Is only heaven that is given away. To is God can be had for the asking.”

OVERSEAS SERVICE!

We all want to do it in France. The war is over, there—but, as Mr. Speer said, to prove the reality of the ideals for which we fought, we must live them in every country.

Further information as to foreign service is within reach. Dr. Brewer Eddy and others will speak at a conference to be held at Boston University, 68 Boylston Street, on November 23-24. You’re a Wellesley College guest! See notice on C. A. board for particulars.

FRIENDSHIP FUND BULLETIN.

The Christian Association Annual Member Committee feels that this year more than any other it should be remembered that the Wellesley Christian Association is a part of the Y. W. C. A. It is, therefore, providing a means whereby students can follow closely the war work, which the Friendship Fund last year made possible. The Committee will sometime this week put up a Bulletin Board, which will probably be near the Student Advisory Service board in the Administration Building. From time to time articles and pictures in the Association Monthly and reports of the different parts of the work will be posted. Everyone watch the Board, for it will be valuable and interesting.

WHY NOT?

Did you pay your C. A. dues on Pay Day? If not, why not? Were you one of those who went to hear Brewer Eddy and came back enlightened and inspired? Do you know about the Patriotic League being formed among the maids to help them not only to “get together” socially but to form and maintain a high standard of ideals? Haven’t you ever gone over to the Wellesley Hills Hospital to read to the children and come back fully of the desire to do something more for them? If you are in a Discussion Group which promotes to mean a lot to you, aren’t you wondering how it came to be so well organized this year? It is the Christian Association which is doing all these things and if you are interested in any of them or in any other activities, don’t you want to support them? The way to do it is to pay your $1.50 dues.

It is your $1.50 which brings Brewer Eddy to Wellesley, which gives the maids their Patriotic League, which helps the children at Wellesley Hills, which makes the organization of the Discussion Groups possible. If you think these causes are worth while, bring your dues to Margaret Christian at the C. A. office.
