WASHINGTON, Mar. 21—Wellesley College was one of several, and perhaps the only one, of the best-known women's colleges to be included in the official list of White House press correspondents. It was announced by Special Assistant to the President, Mrs. Mabel F. Bixby, that Mrs. Charles Van Houten, wife of the President of Wellesley College, would be included in the list of correspondents who are to call on the President and Mrs. Roosevelt at the White House.

The list of correspondents was announced by the White House in response to a request made by President Roosevelt for the names of women correspondents who would be interested in covering the White House. The list was compiled by the White House Correspondents' Association, which represents the press corps covering the White House.

The inclusion of Wellesley College on the list of correspondents is significant because it is one of the few women's colleges that has a strong tradition of academic excellence and is known for its contributions to society. The college has a long history of producing leaders in a variety of fields, including politics, medicine, law, and the arts.

turning to Paris for a fortitude of final impressions: the battlefields, the ruins of the north; six days in Paris; an equal time in Normandy. The party sails from Cherbourg, arrive in New York Sunday, Dec. 18.

The price of the tour is at present placed at $529, but in all probability secures a reduction. For further details, write to 1 S. H., the cost will be decreased.

Registration Starts Soon

Students interested in this tour will want to form a membership to one of the committees of the tour, composed of Miss Baldwinson, Miss Cox, Miss Gerber, Miss Mawr, quelques. During the first week of December, the tour will be driven.

The final choice of students will be made by the Executive Council of College Government with a careful consideration of the all round qualities of the applicants.

Contact with Students Valuable

The advantage of these tours over others is the direct contact with European students and authorities on economic and political issues. Some idea of the scope of this contact may be gathered from the article which follows, written by Jeannette Bulley, who was a member of one of the groups last summer.

"With frequent permission the returned traveller is perplexed by the same question, "What did you most enjoy in your European trip?" The answer is as difficult as the question is common. I think it will well be observed as a verification of the universally valuable and interesting nature of the experience that two particular days always come to my mind immediately after the trip, when we crossed the English Channel, and of the immense size of the banquet given us through the auspices of President Rappard, at the University of Geneva."

VALE IN VICTORY IV—AGITATION DEBATE

but that the morals of students in co-educational colleges are undermined, but he failed to prove that the moral life in a co-educational institution makes for a more normal attitude toward sex. He declared that the students who come to get them, where the class-room is a great part of college life, and, therefore, the class-room, co-educational, leads to a more normal atmosphere and gives clearer insight into after-graduation problems.

Mr. Emerson of the negative stated that his case is to declare that it is not to be considered a country, to go Vale. Mr. Emerson established that the creation of co-educational colleges were conductual and that the remaining half, being for women, was shown to be the result of the opposition of the disadvantages in the absence of an education. The negative pointed out that students went to co-educational primarily for the social opportunities, to have a co-ed dormitory, to change their co-educational grade in a co-ed college and the restrictions that he desires no no: Mr. Emerson quoted Dr. Elliott as saying that the reason for the social desegregation as a result of the co-educational was destruction of the existence of the standard. He also stated that the women are in the public and are no more taken by the women into the humanity, and the men, depriving them of the chance, that they are creating an unfair situation.

With the affirmative failing to persuade me that more stimulatory work is done in mixed classes, and that there are no disadvantages of the co-educational, arguments men's colleges which makes possible more education, and that the all-female Co-education, started in the progressive west, and is constantly growing. The affirmative in his summum said their position in three brief points: co-education gives better training for universal that you have is found in only case that women should get some of the money. Through the class-room, each will arrive at a mutual respect for the capabilities of the other.

Mr. Tazewell of Yale denied that he supported a conservative opinion, but that there was a difference between the higher education and co-education. He cited the fact that co-education began in the eighties and not the end of the century and that now the trend is in the opposite direction. Mr. Jenkins pointed out that his mind is more on the character of the college woman have as much opportunity as men to train for the profession. The affirmative also stated that in the class-room the women naturally shine, thereby destroying the myth of their superior physicality on the football field to the detriment of their academic standing. Intellectual contact outside of the classroom consists in discussions of the future or the forward pass or sports gift. Education is not a question of money, he contended, for many of the greatest educators and learned men had practically no equipment.

GILBERT MURRAY LECTURES ON THE EUMENIDES OF Aeschylus

The Eumenides of Aeschylus was the Greek tragedy chosen by Gilbert Murray, who is now at Oxford University, as the subject of his lectures at Wellesley on December 2. The Greek drama is also known as the "Creek race," a sort of blind fixe devoted to poetry, he writes a 30-cent book for sale at the bookstore.

At the root of all cultural philosophy is the question of whether we should exist for ourselves and because we must die. The Symposium has suffered the hands of Clytemnestra, his wife, while she in turn has been murdered by her own son Orestes. The problems of Orestes in forgone. The law that has said that "he who destroys his son shall be plundered by his son." But is it an endless chain? Must Clytemnestra be killed for his crimes is the son the other side and so on indefinitely? Is there no way out, no forgiveness? When you go home for Christmas—Gifts to take along

What fun to go home with a true, gracious—perhaps an ardent—character of Christmas presents! Gifts of every kind will be mentioned. Some "just right" for all the family.

WELCOME HOUSE

During these last few weeks before time has been spent observing the Wellesley scene. Many of our friends have arrived on campus, and we are seeing a growing number of visitors.
The time for which we have been waiting has arrived.

The college is changing, and we are all the better for it. We are ready to welcome new friends,
and we are looking forward to
the exciting events that lie ahead.

VALIDITY OF TREASURY BILL MANIFEST IN ESTABLISHED

Miss Edna V. McNutt of the Department of History gave an interesting report at a recent meeting of the Wellesley Lipid Society, at which she discussed the subject. The object of her interest was a manuscript in the Treasury Room of the College Library,
which had been signed by Charles I
of Spain, dated in 1607 February 16,
in a state which has been said to be in the three hundred and four years. The purpose of her research was to determine the validity of the Manuskript, which is stated to have been written in the year 1607.

The manuscript was found to be
a copy of the original document,
which was written in the year 1607.
The original document was signed by Charles I of Spain, and dated in 1607 February 16.

In conclusion, the document was found to be genuine, and the validity of the Manuskript, which is stated to have been written in the year 1607, has been established.

business librarian is supposed to be able to do anything which has any connection with library work. A bit of library folklore was recently requested to make a list of all the books for the biography of President. If the one of one of the Executors is on his soliciting team, the business librarian will probably be requested to gather material for him.

Business Librarian Needs

"Business News"

The field for business librarianship is still comparatively narrow and one in which there is much for it to grow. While the work includes the essentials of all library work,—the general principles of cataloging and carding. The most important in the work is the ability to adapt business methods to library routine and adapt library methods to the needs of the particular business. She must be able to plan the best methods, the best equipment, the best organization which will enable her to do the work the best way for the business.

Information Must Be Given Quickly

The chief necessary end of the business librarian is speed. Business men do not want to wait. The main factor in judging the efficiency of business facts quickly and since these facts must be used quickly, they must be processed, cataloged, and available as quickly as possible and quickly available and each librarian must work out the method best suited to the needs of her Library. At the Chamber of Commerce the work of the librarian is chiefly a research problem. In parable closely the type of work done in the general business interest, instead of having a comparatively small group of executives using the library. It is too much. It is to come to use for information. Fortunately not only have they their own business libraries and it is to come to use for information. Fortunately not only have they their own business libraries and it is to come to use for information. Fortunately not only have they their own business libraries and it is to come to use for information. Fortunately not only have they their own business libraries and it is to come to use for information.

College Notes

The first formal meeting of the year of the Civic Social was held Friday evening December 3rd, at Shattuck and Stone. The president, Mrs. Isadore Nash, welcomed into the club Miss Margaret Hunter, who has been president of Franklin College, and Miss Elizabeth Hunt of the University of Oxford. Miss Hunter was introduced by Miss Nash and Miss Hunt, and Miss Hunt was called on to introduce the new members. A short program followed consisting of choruses, which were sung by the members of the club and by Miss Nash and Miss Hunt, and interesting Italian dances.

The University Club met for supper at the Tots Rapids, December 3rd. Miss B. A. Z. Peterson spoke later in the evening.

J. G. Baxter gave a talk at T. Z. K. Thursday afternoon, December 3rd. The President was in attendance.

Renaissance Reinterpreted Through Medieval Research

On November 10 we room 24 Founders Hall, Professor Gibson of the Sorbonne keenly interested his audience in Medieval philosophy. He was presented by both Madame Andreu and Jose Clirou who, as a behalf of the French and Philosophy Department, welcomed him to Wellesley. In introducing his subject, "The Evolution and Meaning of Medieval Philosophy," Professor Gibson mentioned that the only way reason was to find that woman had ever heard of him (a why no one had written about Medieval Philosophy before, that he had found nothing "old," just anything about it). The subject, how, was the rise of humanism, and it was important that in this era artists is excluded. The subject is divided into four parts, according to the explanation of any discussion so related to Medieval philosophy. Practically a passenger in this field, Professor Gibson revealed some facts and images, which he was expressing, that "the very first time of perception is not a proof of a material world, but a test of a spiritual one. The result cannot be explained by experience and human observation is an absolute and necessary; and finally the truth is not only a test of a spiritual one, but a test of a spiritual one, but a test of a spiritual one.
