FELLOWSHIP GIVEN TO ANOTHER POINT OF VIEW

The New York Times is very pleased to present the opinions of a group of young men and women in the administration regarding the question of individual responsibility on the part of students in college. EXCAVATION EGYPTIAN QUEEN’S BURIED FEMALE FRONTPORTS

“Daughter of a king, wife of a king, mother of a king.” via a gold hieroglyphic cartouche in the tomb of Queen Hetepheres, newly discovered by the St. F. P. Carter team from the Harvard-Boston Museum of Fine Arts. Mr. Dow Dunham, a member of the expedition, spoke on the excavation of this tomb and that of Queen Hetepheres. The tomb of Hetepheres was found in the royal burial ground east of the pyramids at Giza. While removing the floor of a street through the mound-like tombs of lesser royalty, a stone coffin was discovered. Beneath this was a stairway leading to a tomb chamber. Almost 189 feet down this shaft was the entrance to the burial chamber. The two tombs were closed by stone slabs that stood on the left, on the right a pile of dust and gold was scattered so thickly that no ancient article had been placed within the tomb. For many months the excavations worked on the confused heap, trying to reconstruct the objects in their original position. This process very much resembed a game of jum straw. Finally, in 1917, a gilded coffin was found. It contained the mummy of a female, thought to be one of the last of the famous pharaohs. The coffin was opened, and the remains of the queen were found. She was dressed in a beautiful robe, and the isis of her face was painted with exquisite detail. It is thought that this was the tomb of Queen Hetepheres, the legendary queen of ancient Egypt. The coffin was moved to the museum for further study.

Landed Gentry Important Factor in Russian History

Baron Meyeroff, who spoke here February 26, based his lecture about Russia on a study of the Russian landed gentry. As a man of position, Baron Meyeroff had the advantage of being one of the last of the great Russian landed gentry. He saw Russia before the emancipation, when the characteristics determined the character of the old serfdom. As a landlord, he had owned the great Manor of Tchistopol, to which he returned to discuss the land.

The owners thought of change, but they were confused with influence from within and from a more active Russian peasantry. The families were not organized, but the peasants were. As a result, the Baron concluded that the landed gentry could not save Russia.

Carnival Results Grateful

Singers, 29 Comes Second

Winter Carnival came and went after the snow fell in the double light from the bonfire and searchlights. The carnival house was a story by light and sprinkled with the sleek white hill and the thin black line of oilers. But it was more than a party, because there was a warmth an absorbing it that is born from the snow. And the result was more for the small class than any other class. They would like to admit! There have been several reactions to our suggestion of individual responsibility for college students, and many replies. We believe it is another step toward rules. We believe that it is necessary for us to have rules, and that we are ready to support them. It is not that we do not want the students to have a free hand, but that we should be made responsible for maintaining the standards of the college without necessarily changing any of the laws. We should be able to regulate the conduct of students and make them responsible for their own conduct to the standards that we set. This is not a hard and fast rule, but rather a flexible one that can be adjusted to the circumstances of the case. It is important to note that this is not a new idea, but one that has been around for a long time. It is important to note that this is not a hard and fast rule, but rather a flexible one that can be adjusted to the circumstances of the case. Consistency

To the Wellesley College News:

There is one, apparently overlooked, in the editorial on "Wellesley as a Delicate Flower" which occurs worth noting. That is the number of permissions granted exceptions for College students. In one year, at least, the number of students granted exceptions seems justified by circumstance. It would seem that the rule should work better. If permission is asked and granted for an exception to a particular rule because of an unusual situation, then it is reasonable that an additional to a rule might also be made and accepted when the situation seems to require it. The possibility of modification in one direction or the other is very limited in the circumstances. On the other hand, College Government rules are to be considered as adequate for the time being. If there is a belief that exceptions should be made, then they should not be considered as rigid and capable of instant permission. Exceptions that are not asking for a return of absolution are often considered the same. Your column is not necessary.

Sidewalks

To the Wellesley College News:

We think it’s a crime when a perfectly good college which has a brand new library is guarded by a state trooper and we have a desert walk to it. For several days we have been planning to buy shoe tops to get to the class in the new building. This morning I waded in the mud and found it to be more mud and slush before this blessed New England winter is over. We are convinced that there is no crime in peeing on sidewalks, white persons ought to do this, especially for people who are particularly good in that field. Some professors are convinced they are doing their students some kind of a service. As for us we think it’s not only wrong but it’s more fun. The answer is that we have a walk of some sort.

Hundreds of students, Botanists, Azaleas and Professor do walk that path three, four, five times a week. We know college regulations are made to be broken, but they haven’t proved themselves to the new way to Botany.

We query and quit and criticize, and that manfully and manfully. Perhaps we do not have our development ideas. It is undoubtedly good for all of us to express ourselves spontaneously.

The Executives.
Galley Slaves

Chained to their seats, cringing under the lash, the galley slaves slowly propelled the heavy hull of a Roman warship.

Today, the electric motors of an American battleship have the energy of a million men, and drive thousands of tons of metal through the water at amazing speed.

Man is more than a source of power in civilized countries. Electricity has made him master of power. In coming years, the measure of your success will depend largely on your ability to make electricity work for you. Competition everywhere grows keener, and electricity cuts costs and does work better wherever it is applied.

In industry, the professions, the arts, and in the home, you will find General Electric equipment helping men and women toward better economies and greater accomplishments.
The special attention of the profession were set forth: the contacts with colored people, the visiting contacts with youth, the opportunities for real service. The large salaries as present offered, the generous vacations, the short sessions, the teaching of women, the lack of other institutions to be considered are factors that make a set-up adaptable, willing to assist in extracurricular activities, should have a sense of human values, that are conservatively dropped.

Mr. Bacon's words that In the business world are set forth to be the prestige of the salaried professions at present open to women.

The series of lectures given at the Museum of Fine Arts and in the prominence of figures in the motion picture industry during the spring of 1927 made our interest in the possible future status of motion pictures as an art worthy of the attention of institutions of higher learning.

Although the number of college-educated women is increasing year by year, and in the subsequent business of negotiating for their showing, is becoming more and more impelling. The Museum of Fine Arts and the motion picture industry are reaching the picture up to the high standards of art and educational value which are set every year higher.

The motion picture industry is not the drawback that it is so often must be with the established arts. The motion picture industry has been on a practical business basis. And for women interested only in the business and that in actual practice there is a growing demand, especially to manage local women's clubs or such groups that can be agents for the selection and recommendation of suitable pictures for every type of audience. The Museum of Fine Arts is and will continue to be, a haven for the exchange of ideas, performances of which have neither the prestige nor the respectability for choosing their pictures.

The introduction of lectures on moving pictures by Mrs. Hume, and also of the Woman's Art Department of the university, to the country girl, to the country woman, in the industrial arts of the country girl and of the country woman, is a great step toward the eventual elevation of the masses and the education of the Art Department of the university.

The desireability, High School teaching as a profession for college granddaughters was presented by Mr. L. B. Bacon, President of the National Association of Secondary School Principals, speaking before the 7th Annual Meeting held on February 28, under the auspices of the Providence Board and the Department of Education. The lecture touched among the important pedagogical problems, and especially that of the training of the teacher, who must be in a position to be of practical service.

The department of education in America is concerned with the teaching of the English language, Latin, and the subject of the time, the teaching of History. It is also concerned with the teaching of the fine arts, and it is of the utmost importance that the teacher be capable of understanding and appreciating the work of art with which he must deal.

ANOTHER REVIEW OF NEW YORK STAGE

Last week we covered the really outstanding plays in New York. This week must suffice the fair and entertaining but not extraordinary productions for those of the most refined and intellectual tastes. The Royal Family by John Ferber and George B. Kaufman, one of the several new plays, the other an experienced playwright. The play concerns a family of brilliant actors all possessed of an zest of temperament which makes life inside their crowded apartments an amusing and clever collection of events. The writers have combined individualized and revealing characters, an illuminating plot, a strong action and sparkling dialogue.

And what John O'Sullivan is very well handled but it is the play itself which is most interesting. It is a drama of original ideas which more people have enough original sin to try and help them. Others evidently did the same for "Justice." The play is marked by O'Sullivan's good craftsmanship and exhibits good dialogue and natural prose-action. It is "pleasing, buoyant, and intellectually stimulating.""
