NOTES OF COMPANY CAMPAGNA

This is a presidential election year and the College Lecture Committee is cooperating with the International Relations Office in planning a series of lectures presenting the issues of the coming campaign from various viewpoints. Believing that all students, and particularly those who will be voters next fall, are interested in knowing something of the positions of the principal candidates, the speaker for Mr. President has been asked to bring to Wellesley to discuss the coming campaign. M. M. Norman, the candidate of the democratic party, will speak on November 1st. Mr. Norman, a former congressman from New Jersey and recently appointed to the Reconversion Finance Corporation to President Roosevelt, will give the Republican view in a lecture on November 4th. Out From Dreams and Theories

KENNECY MOUNTAIN SCHOOL

The Hoodman Settlement School in Kentucky has long been known to Wellesley women of the class of 1897 as a sort of home away from home. The hards have found the informal organization of the school helpful in finding ways to keep in touch with one another. One of the students who has been very active in this movement is the head of the Settlement, Miss Mary M. Haynes, who is working with the Settlement to improve its educational facilities and to develop a stronger sense of community among its students.

ORCHESTRA TO JOIN IN CHOIR CONCERT

The NEW YORKER continues to get discouraging reports about the coming presence of twenty-odd feet of snow on the town. This is a figure that has been bandied about as the least possible amount of snow that would be necessary to achieve an all-white winter. In fact it would be simpler to ban retraction on the formulation of this figure. As pointed out by Mr. Proctor, whether to follow the weatherupal or to give up on the whole idea of a winter season is now up to the voters to decide. If you are not satisfied with the current management of the town, your vote is the most effective weapon you have in your power to change things.

For those who want to know the truth, the train ran out to Albany, or Cleveland, or Kansas City, and points west. Mr. Perry, who is the only one qualified for the job, can be found at a book store, where he will make the necessary arrangements. Mr. Perry is a true gentleman, and will do anything for a good cause, which he believes in.

Theoretically, perhaps, each new editorial board should approach its journalistic agency with a crouching spirit, prepared for a savage determination to change, drastically if necessary. This is the old order, usually referred to as the "old order." It may be an institution of intellectual decadence, but it may also be a barrier to progress—possibly a barrier that may be possible to their honest, but we assure you, the spirit of a scholarly orym and we have no overwhelming desire to reverse the policy, impediment to the promotion of a better understanding.

This does not label us as recalcitrant; we trust; we believe, with the faith of most committees, that there is a better program of progress; and if we may be able to whig in the seniors at the rest of the year that we have in any way contributed to the advance which we are confident is made by the College Press.

But if we can continue the tradition of cooperation between our editorial groups and the authorities and the students, and a clear appreciation of the period in which we live, may we not solve our own problems and those of humanity, and still be able to maintain our function. Unhappily, when we are striving most earnestly, there is a tendency to become too much a part of the scene, and we lose our soul.

Good Bye to All That

While old officers are parting with their pens and new officers are being initiated into the mysteries that surround the performance of their duties, while seniors are the first in line to help their predecessors in the defense of their position, while winter is leaving us, we hope, giving place to spring, we feel that this is not the end of our good-bye to Alumnae Hall.

There is no question that some of us have a hand in the career of that institution. After tomorrow there will be an Alumnae Hall as there will be another building which, like the Art Museum, has been the Chemistry Building, we seldom visit.

It is not often that one has an opportunity to participate in the passing of such a great institution. Alumnae Hall was an institution and, we venture to say, there was just as much romance in its Stevensonian days as there is today, even if our romance is simple. Whether you were a part of it or not, you were a part of that romance.

WEEK-END BOOKS AGAIN

To the Wellesley College News: In an editorial in the News, the Wellesley College News is calling for the inclusion of important reference books of the Library in the weekly newsletter. The call is a response to the criticism that there is no way to access the Library, and that the Library is underutilized.

The Editor's note to this is that the student body should be familiar with the librarians, and that the Newsletter should be used to promote the Library, and that the Library should be more utilised.

PROFESSION PERSPECTIVES

On Tuesday evening, April 19, there will be a discussion at 8 p.m. in the Maple Room of the Faculty Club, the second annual Perspectives "Research in Agriculture," sponsored by the Art and Science Club. The discussion will be moderated by Professor E. Allin Penn of the University of Liverpool in "Spool Today and the Future: Preparing for the Future of Agriculture." The participants will be three faculty members, who will discuss their work and their contributions to the field of agriculture.

MARKET POETRY PRIZE

By the generosity of Mr. John Mascolo, a former student of the College, the Market Poetry Prize is given annually to the student who submits a poem or poems judged worthy of such a prize. This is the second year of the competition.

1. The contest is open to seniors only.

2. Each contestant must submit material on May 20. Manuscripts may be submitted by each person.

3. The poems submitted must not bear the names of the writers, but must be signed by pen-name; the name of the contestant will be marked on the verso of each entry, and examined, but must of all, in the over-all quality of the period just before.

Working Under Pressure

After a week-end of strange and uncomputed leisure, we realize again that the remainder of our lives is the most important of all, and that we must be prepared for the coming day. We have a week-end in town as an escape from daily routine, but we fail to realize that our responsibilities are not going to make it less dull. It is not easy to stay out, and we must do our utmost to make a day of it. We must accept the facts of life and work with renewed interest and vigor. We realize the importance of our work and accept it with the face of ever-constantly changing assignments, but fortunately for us, we do not let our work affect our moods, and that is the moment for a relaxation of our work. We do not attempt to do in half the time, and we may attack work with fresh interest.

In "The Theater," Colonel The Devil forever has a way of sneaking into the Hannah house. The story is an unconventional view of the Devil's mischief. The Devil, with the strength and wits of a man, takes on the forms of different characters, each with their own unique personality traits. The Devil's tricks are often mischievous but clever, and the story captures the essence of the Devil's nature: tricky, cunning, and always one step ahead.

In "Society," the author explores the intricacies of society and its various dynamics. The focus is on the heart of the matter, and the author presents the society as a complex web of interactions and relationships. The story delves into the undercurrents and hidden motives that drive the characters, highlighting the complexity and depth of human nature.

In "The Man," the protagonist, Philip, is a brilliant college student. The story follows Philip's life and his experiences, from his early days at college to his eventual decision to interrupt his studies.

In "Expenditures," the author discusses the concept of socialists and their role in society. The story presents the idea of maintaining a balance between the needs of the many and the desires of the few, and the importance of considering the long-term implications of one's actions.

In "World Power," the author explores the concept of giving or taking in the world of ideas. The story highlights the significance of maintaining a balance between the two, and the importance of considering the impact of one's actions on others.

For the "Campus Critic," the author takes on the role of a critic, providing insights and perspectives on campus life. The story highlights the unique voices and experiences of the college students, capturing the essence of their daily lives and the challenges they face.

In "The Reporter," the author explains the English upshot. The story provides a detailed account of the events surrounding a political figure, highlighting the significance of his actions and the impact on the public and society.

For "Envelope Bag," the author provides a step-by-step guide to making an envelope bag. The instructions are clear and easy to follow, with each step being accompanied by a simple diagram and a list of materials.

In "Rent a Car," the author provides a list of requirements for renting a car. The story outlines the necessary steps to ensure a smooth rental experience, highlighting the importance of choosing the right car and the need for proper planning.

For "French Summer School," the author provides an overview of the French summer school program. The story outlines the benefits of attending a summer school and the various courses and events offered, highlighting the opportunity for cultural immersion.

For "Graduation Dresses," the author provides a list of graduation dresses available for purchase. The story includes a variety of styles and colors, with each dress being accompanied by a photo and a brief description.

The demand for shoes is strong this time of year, and with the expansion of industry, a large number of factories are looking for skilled workers. The school, therefore, decided to emphasize this field of study.

The curriculum includes courses in shoe design, machinery operation, and sewing techniques. The students are also taught the importance of quality control and customer service.

The school hopes that by providing this training, they can help fill the growing demand for skilled labor in the shoe industry.

The book is available for purchase at local bookstores or online retailers. It is recommended for anyone interested in the history of law enforcement and the life of a sheriff.

How the Other Half Lives

Teddy Roosevelt, the then-President of the United States, delivered a speech on the topic at a luncheon hosted by the Women’s Christian Temperance Union. The speech addressed the harsh realities of life for working-class women and children in the United States.

The speech was given in the context of the ongoing labor unrest and strikes of the time, which were fueled by the rapid industrialization and urbanization of the country.

Roosevelt called for reform and blamed the problems on the “maladjustment” of society. He advocated for stronger laws and better working conditions for the poor.

The speech was well-received and marked a turning point in the public discussion of social justice issues.

The book is available for purchase at local bookstores or online retailers. It is recommended for anyone interested in the history of labor movement and the life of Theodore Roosevelt.
